PREFACE

DURING the critical period of Bible study that is just passing, the Hebrew lyrics, and especially the great psalms of the Old Testament Psalter, have been to a certain extent neglected. The present generation, however, is beginning to experience the joy of rediscovering them. Like the Gospels in the New Testament, they are the real heart of the Old Testament. them the innermost soul of the Jewish race is laid bare. In such psalms as the eighth, the twenty-third, the fifty-first, the ninetieth, the ninetyfirst, the one hundred and third, and the one hundred and thirty-ninth Israel's faith finds its noblest expression. These immortal hymns of praise and adoration are also the link that binds the Old to the New Testament. In their atmosphere Jesus was born, bred, and lived, Faith, hope, joy, love, loyalty, and service are the six virtues pre-eminently emphasized. A dauntless faith in God and in man; an invincible hope that the future holds in store only what is essentially good; a screne joy even in the presence of disaster and distress; a passionate love of nature, of nature's God, and of all his creatures; a devoted loyalty to the law, to the institutions and ideals of the race, and to the divine Father who inspired them; and, to crown all. a burning zeal to help the needy, the ignorant and erring, and to carry the knowledge of God and the blessings of true religion to the ends of the earth —these are the supreme contributions of the psalms to the present age. Here Israel's greatest prophets, priests, and sages speak out of the depths and richness of their own personal experience directly to the heart of modern man.

The past century of biblical discovery and research has added much to our appreciation and interpretation of the Old Testament lyrics. The recovery of the ancient Egyptian, Sumerian, and Babylonian hymns has broadened our horizon by at least two millenniums. The discovery of Hebrew, Greek, and other texts, far older than those followed by the translators of the classic Authorized Version of the Bible, has made it possible to substitute in most cases original readings for uncertain conjectures. The rediscovery of the genius of Hebrew rhythm has placed in the hands of the modern translator a most valuable aid in recovering the original text. That the canons of textual revision must be faithfully applied to the Hebrew lyrics is strikingly illustrated by Psalm 18, which is quoted in toto in II Samuel 22. Out of the thirty or more variations between these two versions of the same hymn there are at least twenty examples of scribal errors in the Hebrew text of Psalm 18, which fortunately may be corrected by means of II Samuel 22 as well as by the aid of the Greek and other versions. Like most of the books of the Old Testament, the psalms have not escaped the zeal of the later scribal revisers. As a rule these later explanatory or expansional revisions can be readily recognized; but to cut and hew the Hebrew lyrics to fit a theoretical strophic structure (as certain recent translators and commentators have done) is not only unscientific but in most cases reveals a failure to appreciate the logical and literary unity of the individual psalms. Equally fatal is the tendency to measure Oriental poetry by arbitrary Occidental standards. Another Oriental characteristic of the Psalter—the fact that its prayers and hymns are not logically arranged has presented to many readers and students a most serious difficulty. In this volume the Hebrew lyrics are first classified according to their content and dominant motive and then, within each group, arranged as far as is possible in the order in which they were written. The translation also aims to reproduce the measured beat and the strophic rhythm of the original Hebrew, so that general students of literature, as well as special students of the Bible, may enjoy the matchless beauty both of the form and the thought of these Hebrew classics.

THE GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS OF HEBREW POETRY

POETRY may be defined as the imaginative and rhythmic expression of The the insight, the feeling, and the creative thought of an inspired soul. In tial brief, it is thought and emotion set to the music of words. Its object is to nature awaken and direct the imagination and emotions of the hearer or reader so that he will also share the poet's own insight, feeling, and thought. the fundamental meaning of the word implies, the poet is a maker, a creator, as well as an interpreter. There are four essential elements in all poetry: (1) inspiration, (2) imagination, (3) creative power, and (4) rhythm. Back of all poetry is some inspiring force that stirs the mind of the poet. It may be the beauty of nature, a striking national or personal experience, an illuminating idea, or a deep emotion. Underlying all these, faith recognizes the spirit of the Eternal who, in different ways, touches and imparts his truth to the responsive mind of the poet. The real poet must also possess the power of imagination, the ability to see clearly and concretely with his mental vision that which is not perceived by the ordinary man. Furthermore, he must be able, by the aid of his imagination, to describe his vision in appropriate words and figures and thus to present it clearly and concretely to the eyes of his fellow men. Finally, the prevailing conception of poetry demands that it shall be rhythmic in form. This essential characteristic may be expressed by the rhythm of regular metre, as in Greek poetry; by the rhythmic sound conveyed by the concluding words of each line, as in most English poetry; or by the rhythm of recurring thought. Above all, the rhythmic form must be in harmony with the thought or passion which inspires it.

The earliest examples of Babylonian and Egyptian literature are dis- Its, tinctly poetic in form. In ancient Greece the bards began to sing their early songs centuries before the appearance of the philosophers and historians. Among the early Germans and English the art of poetic composition developed long before that of prose writing. The Hebrews were no exception to this rule. Scattered through the earliest prose writings of the Old Testament are older fragments of popular poems that were current at the beginnings of Israel's history or inherited from its Semitic past.

The reasons why men first expressed their thoughts in poetry are not difficult to discover. They are illustrated by the natural impulses of the child, which to-day faithfully reflect certain of the initial stages in the development of the human race. With him imagination and rhythm, two of the chief characteristics of all poetry, are innate. To dance and skip is for him more natural than to walk. Poetry, with its rhythmic measure and strong appeal to the imagination, is remembered long after plain prose has been forgotten. Nature also tends to emphasize the rhythmic tendencies inherent in the human soul. The rise and fall of the waves, the rhythmic swaying of the trees, the changing phases of the sun and moon, the regularly recurring cycles of the seasons left their deep impression upon primitive man. In him that which was rhythmic found a quick response, even as does martial or rhythmic music in the modern child. The expression of thought or passion in literature was not easy for early peoples. It was only under the impelling influence of a strong, creative force that they overcame the inertia and clothed their ideas in words. It was natural and practically inevitable that the product of that creative force should be poetry. Thus the shepherd prophet Amos, under the influence of a clear vision of impending danger and of a powerful religious and patriotic emotion, voiced his warnings to the nobles of northern Israel in exalted poetic diction. The divine truth had taken possession of him and nothing less than poetry could express the conviction and message that burned within him.

INTRODUCTION

The reasons why early man used poetry

General characteristics of Semitic poetry

The monuments of Babylonia and Egypt have shown that the general characteristics of Hebrew poetry were not peculiar to the Israelites but were shared in common with the Semitic nations that preceded them. The old Sumerian and Babylonian accounts of creation and the ancient hymns sung to the gods by the early inhabitants of the Tigris-Euphrates valley were characterized (1) by a measured beat recurring in succeeding lines and (2) by the rhythm of thought; that is, the second or succeeding lines repeating or else developing the thought of the first line. This same rhythm of measured beat and recurring thought is found in the carliest Egyptian hymns. In many of these poems each succeeding line had three accented syllables. More rarely the four-beat measure prevailed. From the middle of the nineteenth century B.C. comes a noble Egyptian hymn. addressed to Sesostris III, which not only illustrates these fundamental characteristics of Hebrew poetry but is also in the form of six strophes of ten lines each. In Egyptian poetry, however, as well as in the Babylonian. the strophic rhythm appears to have been occasional and exceptional rather than the general rule. The thought always dominated the form, and hold departures from the prevailing measured beat are not uncommon. The same is true of early Arabic poetry. While there are many recurring refrains, a regular strophic or metrical structure is exceptional. It was not until Greek culture began to exert a powerful influence upon Arabic and Syriac poetry that the regular metre with measured syllables first appeared in Semitic literature.

The rhythm of measured beat in Hebrew poetry True to its Semitic inheritance, the fundamental characteristics of Hebrew poetry are the measured beat and the rhythm of thought or sentence. Under the influence of the Greek and Roman ideals of poetry, scholars have for centuries sought to find in the poetry of the Old Testament a metre dependent upon the quality and quantity of the syllables. A few of the late psalms may conform to this standard, but otherwise the quest, as might be anticipated in the light of the Semitic inheritance, has been in vain. Apparently the Hebrew poet considered only the accented syllables. The genius of the Hebrew language gave him considerable liberty in this respect, for it enabled him to combine, as his needs required, certain short words so that they might be pronounced together with one accent. The music, which was a frequent, if not the constant accompaniment of early Hebrew poetry, likewise favored the measured accentuation of succeeding lines. It is probable that the poets in reciting their poems were allowed large freedom. Many of them, like the earlier Babylonian and Egyptian poets, frequently departed from their adopted measure, especially at the beginning and end of stanzas. In general the tendency was to begin with a longer and to close a stanza with a shorter line. Sometimes the Hebrew poets passed abruptly from one kind of measured beat to another. Thus a part of the charm of the peerless twenty-third Psalm is that it begins in the first stanza with the three-beat, passes in the second to the four-beat, and rises in the last stanza to the five-beat measure.

The two-beat measure was used but rarely. Its staccato notes were Use and well adapted to express the trumpet note of warning on the appearance cance of a foreign foe or for use in the popular songs that accompanied the rapid of the different dance. By far the most common measure or metre (using the word in its measures broadest sense) adopted by the Hebrew poets was the three-beat. It was admirably adapted to the length of the ordinary brief, forceful sentence and enabled the poet to present his thoughts in rapid, effective sequence. The four-beat measure was used but rarely. It was employed by Amos in the vigorous argument which he introduced in the latter part of the third chapter of his prophecy and not infrequently by the psalmists with impressive force. Next to the three-beat the five-beat measure was used most frequently by Israel's poets. It was really a combination of the three-beat with the short two-beat measure. The latter, like a catch in the breath, suggested with rare effectiveness the deep emotion that filled the heart of the poet. In later days it was the characteristic measure employed in the lamentations uttered over the bier of the dead. Jeremiah's impassioned warnings and appeals to his erring countrymen are all expressed in this dramatic measure. It was also used, as by the second Isaiah and the authors of many of the psalms, to voice the profound emotions of praise and thanksgiving which breathe through these immortal poems. Very rarely, as in Psalm 127, the six-beat measure is found. Thus, not only by their words and thoughts and gestures, but by the poetic measures which they employed and by the cadence of succeeding sentences, Israel's poets were able to appeal to the trained instincts of their hearers and to convey their ideas with a remarkable completeness and emotional coloring. One of the chief charms of the Authorized Version is that its translators instinctively reproduced, to a great extent, the lilt of the Hebrew, although they printed all poetry as prose. In the present text an attempt has been made to reproduce, as far as is practicable in an exact translation, the measured cadence of the original Hebrew.

INTRODUCTION

The rhythm of thought

A characteristic of Hebrew poetry, even more fundamental than the cadence of measured beat, was the rhythm of thought in succeeding lines. By its modern discoverer, Bishop Lowth, it was called parallelism, although the term is not entirely exact. To the Western ear repetition of thought is tautological, and tautology is displeasing; but to the Israelites the essence of poetry was the rhythm of idea. Unquestionably this fundamental characteristic of Hebrew added greatly to its clarity and effectiveness. If the thought was not fully expressed in the first line it could be brought out clearly in the second. This type of rhyme bound the different members of the verse close together and gave to Hebrew poetry its forceful, didactic quality. It was also far easier for the poet to conform to the canons imposed by the rhythm of thought than to the more mechanical demands of a formal metre or rhyme. Thus the Hebrew type of rhythm, instead of impeding, greatly facilitated the free and effective expression of the poet's thought.

Synonymous parallelThree primal types of parallelism or rhythm of thought may be distinguished. The first is the synonymous or repeating parallelism in which the second line repeats the thought of the first in slightly variant form. Sometimes it amounts to practical reiteration, as in Isaiah 15¹:

In a night Ar of Moab was devastated, ruined, In a night Kir of Moab was devastated, ruined.

More frequently the principal words in the second line are synonyms of the corresponding words in the first line, as, for example, in Psalm 517:

Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean, Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

This synonymous or repeating parallelism is by far the most common type in lyric poetry. It lent itself naturally to the expression of emotion and the results of quiet meditation.

Antithetic parallelism The second type was the antithetic or contrasting parallelism in which the second line presented a parallel and yet contrasting idea. This form was very rare in lyric poetry, but was frequently used by the wisdom writers, for dramatic contrast is a most valuable aid in impressing an important truth, especially upon the minds of the young. The following are examples of this type:

A fool's anger is known at once, But a sensible man overlooks an insult. (Pr. 12¹⁶.) Better the little that the righteous have Than the wealth of many wicked men. (Ps. 37¹⁶.)

Synthetic parallelism The third type was a synthetic or developing parallelism in which the thought of the first line is completed or expanded in the second or succeeding lines. This form was especially fitted to express developed thought and complex emotion and was frequently employed by the gnomic as well as the lyric poets. Thus Proverbs 153 reads:

> The eyes of Jehovah are in every place. Keeping watch over the evil and the good.

Certain other less common types of parallelism are found. These are in Emblereality more complex developments of the three primal types. One is emblematic parallelism, in which a common experience or truth is illustrated ism by a comparison usually drawn from nature:

As cold water to a thirsty man, So are good news from a far country. (Pr. 25^{25} .)

In Psalm 371 the first two lines are in a synonymous parallelism, the third and fourth illustrate the emblematic type, while the second of two couplets stands in synthetic relation to the first:

> Fret not thyself because of evil-doers, Nor be envious of those who do wrong, For as grass they will quickly wither. And like the green herb fade away.

Another type is the stair-like or chain-like parallelism in which a word or Stair-thought in one line is taken up and expanded in each succeeding line. It is parallelin reality a developed form of the synthetic parallelism. Thus, Psalm ism 248b, o reads:

Who is the King of glory? Jehovah strong and mighty. Jehovah mighty in battle.

And Psalm 31, 2:

O Jehovah, how many are my foes! Many are rising up against me; Of me many are saying: 'For him there is no help.'

A third type is the introverted or enveloped parallelism in which the first Introand last lines are closely parallel to each other and the intervening lines vertee expand the thought of the first. This type is, therefore, a combination of ism the synonymous and synthetic parallelism. A good illustration is found in Psalm 308-10:

To thee, O Jehovah, I call and make supplication; What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the pit? Can the dust give thee praise, make known thy faithfulness? Oh hear and be gracious, become to me a helper.

INTRODUCTION

Strophes and refrains A third type of rhythm frequently employed with great effectiveness by the Hebrew poets may be designated as the strophic, in which each succeeding stanza of a poem repeated in different form or else expanded the thought of the preceding stanzas. Clear examples of this type of rhythm are found in Amos 4⁶⁻¹¹, where each stanza of four lines repeats the same note of warning and ends with the powerful refrain:

Yet ye have not returned to me, is the oracle of Jehovah.

In Isaiah 98-104, with its original conclusion, now incorporated in 5^{26-29, 260, f}, is found a powerful poem describing Jehovah's successive judgments upon lawless Israel. It consists of five strophes, each containing fourteen lines and ending in the dramatic words:

For all this his anger is not turned away, And his hand is outstretched still.

Similarly, Psalms 42 and 43 originally constituted one poem of three stanzas, each with the concluding formula (found in 42⁵, 11, 43⁵):

Why art thou cast down, O my soul, And why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him, Who is the help of my countenance and my guide.

Rhythm of strophe The strophic arrangement of the verses was exceedingly common, especially in the later poetry. Frequently it has been obscured by the additions of later scribes. It was not, however, a universal characteristic of Hebrew poetry, and the attempt of certain modern scholars to restore all Hebrew poetry to this strophic form is both misleading and disastrous, for to carry through this theory they are often forced to delete many words and sentences which are clearly original and to disregard the logical connection of the thought and the literary unity of the whole. The Hebrew poets, as a rule, refused to be bound by the bonds of an exact strophic structure. To them the clear, forceful expression of their message was far more important than its external form. Although the thought of the earlier Hebrew poets is rarely confined to the narrow limitations of a strophic structure, there is usually a rhythmic parallelism which binds together the succeeding stanzas and greatly increases the clarity and effectiveness of their poems.

Occasional characteristics The ordinary rhyme employed in modern English and German poetry, which is the recurrence of the same sound at the end of succeeding lines, was not a fundamental but only an occasional characteristic of Hebrew poetry. The clearest illustrations are found in the snatches of popular song preserved in the book of Judges. The riddle propounded by Samson at his bridal feast is a rhyme which has been felicitously translated by Professor Moore:

Out of the eater came something to eat, And out of the strong came something sweet.

GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS OF HEBREW POETRY

Samson's reply to the Philistines, when they had found out through his wife the answer to his riddle, ends in the two Hebrew words eglathî and hidathî, and may be rendered:

> If with my heifer you did not plow, You had not solved my riddle, now!

The song, which is attributed to Samson's foes, also contains four rhyming words in three succeeding lines that may be rendered:

> Our god has brought low,— Under our sway, our foe, He who wrought our country's woe. Who slew many of us at a blow.

The closing words of Psalm 6 and of Job 100-18 also rhyme; but outside of these few examples this external characteristic is found very rarely in Hebrew poetry. It was apparently confined to the popular songs and was regarded as undesirable by Israel's great poets.

More common in the prophets is assonance or paronomasia. Isaiah Assomakes an effective play on the similar sounds of the two Hebrew words and mishpāt and mispāh and cedākā and ce ākā, which may be rendered:

nomasia

He looked for justice, but beheld injustice, For redress, but beheld a cry of distress. (Is. 5^7 .)

Amos also, in the vision recorded in 81, 2, plays upon the meaning of similarly sounding words (kăyic and kēc), the one meaning summer fruit and the other end. More common in the later poetry, but more artificial, was the acrostic. Thus, for example, in Nahum 1, in the first four chapters of Lamentations, and in many psalms, as, for example, Psalm 119, each succeeding line or group of lines begins with a succeeding letter of the Hebrew alphabet.

To the modern Western reader the charm of Hebrew poetry is found not Literary in its external form but in its innate literary characteristics. As a rule, it characteristics. is highly subjective in content but objective and concrete in its form of thebrew expression. The inner feelings of the poet are vividly pictured by means of poetry illustrations drawn from the realm of nature or from common physical experiences. The picturesque Hebrew language, in which each word suggests a familiar picture or feeling or action, lent itself readily to the poet's use. The lack of abstract terms also compelled him to express himself concretely. Expressing his emotions in the terms of physical sensations, the Hebrew poet with true psychological skill was able to arouse the same emotions in the minds of his hearers. These sensations were also elemental and therefore limited to no race or age. The result is that to-day, in reading the psalms, we not only grasp the thought of the psalmist but also feel with him the fear or the passion or the joy that stirred his soul as he wrote.

INTRODUCTION

Hebrew poetry is also characterized by its spontaneity and carnestness. The Semitic mind is naturally intense, and the painful experiences through which the Israclites passed emphasized this characteristic. The attention of the reader is quickly attracted and constantly held by the sheer power of the poet's earnestness. Frequent changes in speaker and point of view impart to Hebrew poetry a strong dramatic quality. At the same time it is vivid and graphic. The Hebrew poets are keenly alive to the importance of variety and contrast. They are always simple but rarely if ever descend to the trite and commonplace. The clearness of their thought is not impeded by cumbersome phrases or unfamiliar illustrations. As a rule, their style is sententious. Instead of piling clause upon clause, they prefer the simple couplet. In this respect their style resembles that of the Semitic story-tellers, who constantly depend upon the simple connective and rather than upon the more elaborate conjunctions. Above all, the Hebrew poets confine themselves largely to themes of common human interest. They dramatically portray, in language simple, vivid, and concrete, the vital experiences shared by all mankind. Above all, they are inspired by a noble yet practical moral purpose that enables them to satisfy elemental needs. It is not strange that Hebrew poetry has attracted and held the attention of all classes as no other literature known to man.

П

THE DIFFERENT TYPES OF HEBREW POETRY

It is significant that more than half of the literature that has come down Reasons from the early Hebrews is poetry. There are many reasons why their greatest writers were poets. To the Greeks the world of nature was not were a attractive, and there are comparatively few allusions to it in the literature poets of that race. The Hebrews, however, were in closest touch with nature, and the picturesque, varied land of Palestine spoke inspiringly to its early inhabitants. Above all, the Hebrews saw in nature the external manifestations of Jehovah's character. The fructifying rains, the destructive storms. the droughts, the locust plagues, in fact, all the striking phenomena of their widely diversified land, were believed by the Hebrews to come directly from Jehovah. Nearly every hilltop was crowned by a sanctuary where the early inhabitants worshipped the God of the mountains and the hills. The trees were the symbol of his life-giving power and of his everlasting care. Each gushing spring testified to his gracious provision for the needs of his creatures. All nature spoke to them of God and hence inspired them with emotions of reverence and trust and gratitude.

The ancestors of the Hebrews came from the stern life of the desert, which developed a constant sense of dependence and intense loyalty to the God of the tribe and nation. Hence they and their descendants were by nature and training deeply religious. And religion (in its larger meaning) is the most powerful force that can stir the heart of the poet. The perilous, warlike life of the Hebrews in Palestine also constantly fostered and further developed their sense of constant dependence upon Jehovah and the habit of attributing every event in their history to his direct intervention. tragic, harrowing experiences that came to them during the later centuries aroused within them the deepest emotions of which man is capable, and thus inspired and practically compelled them to express their thoughts and feelings in poetry. The liturgical demands of the later-ritual also led the faithful Jews who gathered about the second temple to voice their experiences in the psalms which are found in the Psalter. Thus, throughout all of Israel's history, most of the forces which produce poetry were actively at work.

Three fairly well-defined periods may be distinguished in the development The difof classic Hebrew poetry. The first is the age of popular songs. It begins with the entrance of the Hebrews into Canaan, about 1150, and extends to the period of Amos, about 750 B.C. The second is the prophetic period, which begins with Amos in 750 and ends with the work of the second Isaiah, about 450 B.C. The third is the age of devotional and wisdom periods history Hebrew poetry. It begins about 450, to which date may be assigned the main poetical sections of the books of Job, and extends to about 50 B.C., when the apocryphal book known as the Wisdom of Solomon was probably written. The poetical books of the Old Testament, therefore, represent a period of at least eleven centuries. They are clearly the work of scores of different writers. Certain of the songs found in Genesis and Numbers, as, for example, the so-called Song of Lamech in Genesis 4 and the Song of the Well in Numbers 21¹⁷⁻¹⁸, come in all probability from the early nomadic period preceding the entrance of the Israclites into Canaan.

Early folksongs

The few folk-songs and early poems that have been preserved in the historical books of the Old Testament suffice to suggest the character of this once extensive poetic literature. Evidently all the important events in the early life of the Hebrews were celebrated with songs and music. Although the Song of Songs itself is late, it has preserved a group of popular poems that were apparently sung in connection with the wedding festivals. They are in many ways the best representatives of the popular poetry of ancient Israel. Similarly, songs were sung in connection with national calamities and beside the bier of the dead. Many of these dirges have been preserved. Amos 63 also contains a reference to the songs that were sung in connection with the banquets given by the voluptuous nobles of northern Israel. The Song of the Well in Numbers 21 is evidently a type of the popular songs that were composed by the local poets on the occasion of any important event in the life of a tribe or the nation. Isaiah 144 and 2316 contain examples of the taunt songs that were sung over a fallen enemy or to cast disgrace upon a private or public foe. Great deliverances like that of the exodus, or victories like that of the Hebrews beside the Kishon, inspired the poets to sing of the achievements of their heroes. These songs appear to have been chanted by the women, as in the days of David, when the victorious warriors returned from battle laden with spoils. Scattered through the historical books there are also many priestly oracles, such as that attributed to Jacob in Genesis 49, and public prayers, like that of Solomon at the dedication of the temple, now found in the Greek versions of I Kings 8^{12, 13}. Their original poetic form is still retained and they all testify to the prominent place that poetry held in the early life of the Israclites.

Ancient bards and songbooks Numbers 21²⁷ and II Samuel 19²⁵ contain references to a class of bards or singers who doubtless composed many of these songs and preserved in oral form those which had been handed down from preceding generations. They correspond to the similar class of singers who are still found among the Arabs of the desert and who recite beside the camp-fires the songs that tell of the adventures of the tribe and the achievements of its popular heroes. In I Samuel 25²⁸ there is a reference to the Book of the Wars of Jehovah which is evidently a collection of songs recording the victories won by the Israelites in the name of Jehovah. A similar collection of ancient songs, which has unfortunately been lost, was the Book of Jasher; that is, The Book of the Upright. Jasher is evidently a popular designation of the nation, Israel. The quotations (e. g., Josh. 10¹⁸⁵, II Sam. 1¹⁸, I Kgs. 8²³, Gk.) indicate that these poems dealt with important events in Israel's history, such as David's lament over the death of Saul and Jonathan or Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple. These references and quotations also suggest the wide variety and extent of the popular Hebrew poetry, most of which has, unfortunately, been forever lost.

The character and content of the prophetic poetry which comes from the The second period of Israel's literary history have already been discussed in pro-Volume III. The poetic addresses of the prophets were the natural outgrowth of the early oracles which appear to have been invariably cast in poetic form. In presenting their messages the prophets used almost every type of poetry known to the Hebrew. With the exception of portions of Ezekiel, Haggai, and Zechariah, their original oral prophecies were always put in the form of poetry. By them the lyrical note, which was struck by the earlier prophets, was still further developed and the foundations laid for that still wider development of lyrical poetry which characterized the third period of Israel's literary history. Doubtless, during the same prophetic period many of the proverbs and some of the psalms, which have ultimately found a place in the book of Proverbs and the Psalter, were current on the lips of the people. It was this second prophetic period of Israel's history that gave to the race the ideas and the impulses which found expression in the retrospective and didactic literature of the third period.

During the third period Israel's poetry assumed two distinct forms. The The lyrical group is represented by the Psalter, the occasional psalms in the first of the book of Maccabees, in the concluding chapters of Ben Sira, and in the Psalter third of Solomon. This group reflects the experiences, the emotions, and the aspirations of the Jewish race and of the different classes within Judaism. other group includes the gnomic or wisdom literature found in Proverbs. portions of Ecclesiastes, Ben Sira, the Wisdom of Solomon, and in the crowning work of the Hebrew sages—the book of Job. It is the result of the earnest desire of Israel's latest teachers to make practical and effective in the life of their own and succeeding generations that which was best in the moral and religious experiences of the past and most vital in the teachings of earlier priests and prophets.

The drama was not a product of the Semitic mind. Thus far no drama has The been found in the literatures of ancient Babylonia and Egypt. The Hebrew prophets, in their poetic addresses, frequently employed dialogue. Ezekiel reveals great dramatic qualities, and one of the chief charms of Hebrew literature is its dramatic character; but the Israelites produced no pure drama. The book of Job is the nearest approximation to it, yet its action and progress are subjective rather than objective. Furthermore, the Old Testament contains no clear example of an epic. The song of Deborah has many epic qualities, but it is more than mere poetic presentation, for through it all runs a large lyric element. Its brevity also forbids its classification as a pure epic, for less than twenty verses are devoted to heroic narration. The epic, however, was not foreign to the Semitic mind. One of the earliest and noblest examples of early Babylonian literature is the so-called epic of Gilgamesh, which in a series of twelve cantos tells of the various deeds of the traditional hero Gilgamesh, who was the prototype of the Greek Hercules. The marked epic character of Israel's early narratives, the frequent references to older poetic sources, and the fact that the prose narrators at many points quote from early poetic sources favor, although they do not absolutely prove, that the Hebrews once possessed a great epic which described in connected form the earlier events in their national history and the deeds of their great heroes. Fortunately, we possess the prose (which may have been the original and only) version of that national epic.

lyric overshadowed all other types of Hebrew
poetry

The most characteristic product of Hebrew poetic genius is the lyric. This type of poetry was originally intended to be sung to the accompaniment of a musical instrument, and expresses the individual emotions of the poet or of those for whom he speaks. Like most Semitic poetry, it is highly subjective, although its figures are often exceedingly concrete. The dominance of the lyric note in Hebrew literature is due to a variety of causes. It was primarily owing to the peculiar genius of the race. The Hebrews were pre-eminently individualists. The personal and racial points of view are prominent in all of their early writings. The extremely simple structure of the Hebrew language also favors the lyric rather than the more complex forms of poetry. Furthermore, as has been noted, the chief motive in their life was religion, and the lyric is the most natural expression of religious feeling. The great crises through which the Hebrews passed and the many painful experiences which came to them aroused the deepest personal emotions and intensified their tendency to develop the lyric.

While this type of poetry is distinctly individualistic, there is also a strong universalistic note running through the lyric poetry of the Old Testament. It is, in part, because the experiences of Israel's poets were common to the human race. In the psalms many chords are struck which find a quick response in the heart of man in every age and race. The result is that in much of the lyric poetry of the Old Testament there is a timeless quality which expresses the universal experiences and emotions of humanity.

The grouping of the Hebrow lyrics

The lyric poetry of the Old Testament represents the work of many different poets who wrote under the impulse of a great variety of emotions and in widely separated periods in Israel's history. The oldest as well as the latest poems in the Old Testament are lyrics. In their present form they are either scattered through the historical books or else massed together in the Psalter without any definite system of arrangement. In order to utilize them for reading, study, or even devotional purposes, it is important that they be classified. The primary need is to group together those poems which are written from the same point of view and with kindred aims. The first canon of classification, therefore, is that of authorship. Each of the three great groups of Israel's teachers, the prophets, the priests, and the sages, contributed certain of the lyric poems now found in the Psalter. Most of the lyric poems fall under one of the three heads, prophetic, priestly. or didactic. A still more fundamental canon in the classification of lyric poetry is the dominant emotion, whether it be that of exultation or aspiration, as in certain of the early tribal songs; or of sadness, as in the dirges found in the book of Lamentations; or of thanksgiving, of praise, of adoration, of penitence, or of worship, as in the different psalms of the Psalter. A few psalms reflect a wide variety of emotions, but the great majority may be readily classified in accordance with this canon.

Before the exile the chief note in Israel's life was either the pride or aspira- The tion of the tribe or nation. After the exile the Jews for four centuries trend from the turned from their narrow national ambitions and from trust in their own national resources to Jehovah as their one source of joy, glory, and deliverance. to the individ-As the nation went down in ruin the individual for the first time emerged ual into prominence. The result is that the personal note becomes ever clearer view in the poetry that comes from the four centuries beginning with the Babylonian exile. Adoration, praise, and thanksgiving, expressive of triumph not of the sword but of faith, or else the note of penitence and fervent petition, filled the hearts and found expression through the lips and pens of the faithful who worshipped at the second temple. This unmistakable trend from the national to the individual point of view suggests the canon to be followed in determining the order of the larger groups of poems. Within each group it is also important to arrange the poems, as far as possible, in their chronological order, thus furnishing a basis for an historical study of the different phases in the development of Israel's faith.

The oldest group of Hebrew lyrics are the folk or national songs. These The fall naturally into four general divisions: (1) triumphal odes, (2) traditional oracles, (3) dirges, and (4) love and wedding songs. The triumphal odes were sometimes sung by the warriors but in early Israel more commonly by the women after a great deliverance, like that of the exodus, or a great victory, as that over the Canaanites beside the Kishon. They preserved in this popular, poetic form the memory of the great events and achievements in Israel's history and, therefore, have found a place among Israel's historical records. Out of these triumphal odes there developed, under the changed conditions which resulted from the Babylonian exile, the imprecatory psalms in which the inherited hatred and the burning sense of injustice with which the Jews regarded their heathen persecutors found fervent and often to us repulsive expression. Out of the older triumphal odes also developed the hymns of praise, thanksgiving, and adoration addressed to Jehovah by his afflicted yet trusting people. A third group included the majestic psalms describing Jehovah's leadership of his people in the past and the way in which he had delivered them from their foes. Through many of these runs the spirit of the old triumphal odes, even though the victories which they commemorate took place centuries before.

Another early form of Hebrew lyric poetry may be designated as the The tratraditional oracle. In these poems the experiences and aspirations of later oracles generations were put in the mouths of the early fathers and leaders of the race, such as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Moses. These memories and hopes were cast in the characteristic poetic form of the ancient prophetic oracles. Many such traditional oracles are incorporated in the historical books. Most of them are older than their prose setting. Out of these grew in later times the great oral prophecies of the pre-exilic period and the psalms which embody the messianic hopes of the exilic and post-exilic periods. The Jewish apocalypses, as, for example, those in the second part of the book of Daniel, are still later modifications and expansions (but in prose form) of the earlier oracles.

he

The third primitive type of lyric poetry is the dirge. Public lamentations for the dead may be traced back to the beginnings of Semitic history. In the days of the ancient Sumerian king Gudea professional mourners were employed to sing songs of lament over the bier of the dead. They were probably connected with the temples. One class was known as the wailers, another as the howlers. They included both men and women. These lamentations were usually accompanied by music. The plaintive music of the harp and flute was best suited to the spirit of these dirges. The song of lament and the praise of the departed were voiced by the leader, while the chorus joined in the refrain. In the famous old Babylonian epic the hero Gilgamesh laments over his dead friend Eabani:

Thou takest no part in the noble feast,
To the assembly they call thee not.
Thou liftest not the bow from the ground;
What is hit by the bow is not for thee;
Thy hand grasps not the club nor strikes the prey,
Nor stretches thy foemen dead on the earth.
The wife thou lovest thou kissest not,
The wife thou hatest thou strikest not.
The child thou lovest thou kissest not,
The child thou hatest thou strikest not.
The might of the earth has swallowed thee.
O Darkness, Darkness, Mother Darkness!
Thou enfoldest him like a mantle,
Like a deep well thou enclosest him!

The Hebrew mourning customs The Hebrew mourning customs apparently preserved those which had been followed for thousands of years in the ancient Semitic world and still prevail in the lands of the East. The relatives of the deceased, and especially the hired mourners, were clad in sackcloth made from the hair of goats or camels (II Sam. 21¹⁰, Is. 15³). With dishevelled locks, with bare feet and legs, often cutting their hair and mutilating their features, they threw themselves down beside the dead or else sat on the ground casting dust upon their heads (II Sam. 15³⁰, Is. 3²⁵, Jer. 16⁶). Among these Hebrews the majority of these hired mourners were women, although male mourners are mentioned (Jer. 9¹⁷, II Chr. 35²⁵). Ordinarily, the mourners fasted during the daytime (I Sam. 31¹³, II Sam. 3³⁵). At sunset the funeral feast was held. The wild shrieks and weird cries uttered by the hired mourners in the East to-day make vivid the scenes about the graves of the dead in ancient Israel.

heir sychoogical In the old Babylonian epic the laments of Gilgamesh secured immortality for his friend Eabani; but this does not appear to have been the original psychological basis of the death dirge. Not until the later Jewish period did the belief in individual immortality gain acceptance even among the Israelites. It is more probable that in earliest days the cries of the mourners were intended to placate or keep away the spirits of the dead. This reason well explains the cutting of the beard and the mutilating of the body. The heathen origin of these rites explains why they were prohibited by the later Jewish law (Lev. 19^{27, 28}). It is possible, however, that, as among many peoples to-day, the belief prevailed that the spirit of the dead lingered for a time near the body of the deceased and that offerings presented to it and songs sung in his honor gave joy to the departed. In modern Palestine the tombs of Moslem saints are often covered with gifts presented by their descendants or by the natives who venerate the sacred spot. In the biblical laments that have been preserved the chief motive seems to be to commemorate the achievements of the fallen hero or to express the sorrow of the friends who survive. The emotional Oriental undoubtedly finds great relief and a certain melancholy pleasure in these dramatic expressions of his grief.

Two kinds of dirges are found in the Old Testament. In the one an indi- The two vidual hero is the object of the poet's grief; in the other a city or nation. The oldest and in many ways the noblest example of the Hebrew lament is the dirge which David sang over Saul and Jonathan. It opens with a stanza in the quick, two-beat measure which gradually rises to the three and four beat and describes the greatness of the calamity that had befallen Israel. The royal poet David then goes on to describe the bravery, attractiveness, and achievements of the fallen heroes. Through it all runs the recurring refrain:

How have the mighty fallen!

The dirge which David sang over Abner represents even more closely the popular lament which the hired mourners crooned over the body of the dead. In Jeremiah 2210 the prophet laments in the same way over the exiled Jehojahaz, whose fate he likens to that of the dead. The late tradition in II Chronicles 3425 states that Jeremiah lamented for Josiah and that all the singing men and singing women to this day speak of Josiah in their dirges. In Ezekiel 322-10 this priest-prophet of the exile sings a dirge, which is in reality a taunt song, over the Egyptian Pharaoh. The earliest example of the lament over the nation is the dramatic dirge sung by Amos over northern Israel whose coming downfall he thus vividly portrayed (Am. 51, 2). Jeremiah, in the same spirit, puts a dirge in the mouth of the singing women of Judah (Jer. 917-22). Later, in 127-12, he laments over the approaching fate of sinful Judah. The prophetic books contain many taunt songs in the form of dirges addressed by the prophet to Israel's hostile foes. Of these the stirring poem in Isaiah 144-20, describing the fall of Babylon, Ezekiel's picturesque dirges over the fall of Tyre in chapters 26-28, and the taunt songs over the Philistines, Moabites, Amonites, Edomites, Damascens, the Arabians and even the distant Elamites in Jeremiah 47-49. are the most important. To this group belong the five songs of lamentation now preserved in the book of Lamentations, which represent the culmination of this strong elegiac tendency in Israel's thought and literature.

Ш

THE STRUCTURE AND AUTHORSHIP OF THE BOOK OF LAMENTATIONS

THE book of Lamentations is the most conventional and stereotyped of all the Old Testament writings. Four of its five chapters consist of acrostics in which each succeeding verse or group of verses begins with a succeeding letter of the Hebrew alphabet. Even though the fifth chapter is not an acrostic, it has twenty-two verses corresponding to the number of letters in the Hebrew alphabet. In the first and second chapters each verse contains three lines, in the fourth a couplet of but two lines. These rigid limitations in structure necessarily impede the free development of the thought. While these dirges lack the freedom and spontaneity of many other Hebrew poems they are not deficient in strong emotion and contain a remarkably vivid portrayal of the incidents and experiences connected with the destruction of Jerusalem. The poet's reason for employing the acrostic structure was evidently to aid the memory. His motive in writing was liturgical, that is, to furnish hymns that might be readily remembered and chanted, probably in connection with the fasts which were observed in commemoration of the destruction of Jerusalem and of the temple. In the seventh chapter of Zechariah the prophet refers to such fasts which in his day had already been observed for seventy years, beginning with the destruction of the temple in 586 p.c. In form and content these poems were well adapted to this liturgical usc. They kept alive in vivid form the memories of Israel's tragic experience. They aimed to impress upon the minds of the people the lessons taught by their past, "lest they forget." They also aimed to interpret the meaning of those experiences and to justify Jehovah's rigorous dealing with his people, and thus to arouse in the heart of the nation faith and adoration even in the presence of overwhelming calamity. To the historian they are of inestimable value, for they reveal the soul of the race and give contemporary pictures of conditions in Jerusalem in the days preceding and following its overthrow regarding which Israel's historians are almost silent.

Author-

The position of the book of Lamentations in the English Bible is due to the influence of a tradition preserved in the superscription to the Greek text of Lamentations: And it came to pass after Israel had been led captive and Jerusalem laid desolate that Jeremiah sat down weeping and lifted up this lament over Jerusalem. The tradition that Jeremiah was the author of Lamentations may be traced back to the Greek period in the statement of the Chronicler (II Chr. 3525): And Jeremiah sang a song of lamentation for Josiah. and all the singing men and women speak of Josiah in their lamentations to this day. And they made them a custom in Israel, and now they are written in Lamentations. The tradition that Jeremiah was the author of the book of Lamentations was probably suggested by the fact that of all the great Hebrew prophets Jeremiah alone was present to witness the closing scene in Judah's death agony. He also, more frequently than any other prophet, interspersed his prophecies with dirges. His favorite metre was the five-beat, which, since the days of Amos, had been the customary lamentation metre. Many of the expressions and ideas in Lamentations are peculiar to Jeremiah, indicating that, if he did not write these poems, he at least exerted a strong influence upon the thought of those who composed them, so that there is a real underlying basis for the tradition.

The evidence that Jeremiah was not the author of Lamentations is, however, cumulative and on the whole conclusive. It is almost inconceivable that one who so frequently disregarded the rules of Hebrew metre would allow himself to be bound by the artificial limitations of the acrostic. Many of the teachings in Lamentations are also contrary to those of Jeremiah, as, for example, the explanation of the calamities which overtook his nation (cf. 57) or the estimate of Judah's last king, Zedekiah. (Cf., e. g., 29, 417, 18, 20.) They reflect rather the popular attitude toward the great catastrophe. Many of the characteristic phrases of Ezekiel are woven into these dirges, indicating that their authors were acquainted with the priest-prophet of the exile. Certain of the poems also reflect later situations and points of view. The variations in the order of the letters in the Hebrew alphabet and in the literary style and excellence of the different chapters point clearly to at least two or three different authors.

Chapters 2 and 4 are the oldest poems in the book and probably come Date of from the same author. Each reveals an intimate familiarity with the tragic chapters 2 and 4 events attending the final destruction of the city and temple. The emotions of the author are so strong that they overcome the regular limitations of the acrostic structure. They reflect the feeling of astonishment and stupefaction with which the survivors regarded the great catastrophe. The insane hunger of the women, the helpless misery of the children, the shameless indignities heaped upon the rulers of Judah are portrayed with remarkable vividness and fidelity. The influence of Ezekiel may also be clearly recognized in these chapters. (Cf. 214 and Ezek. 2228.) The downfall of the state is attributed to the misleading teachings of the mercenary priests and prophets. The same unusual order of letters of the Hebrew alphabet is followed in both poems, while in 1 that which became the later order is followed. These poems were probably written in Judah some time between the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 and the liberation of Jehoiachin in 561 B.C., by one who was intimately acquainted with Zedekiah's fatal policy (217), and was also a devoted supporter of the ill-fated king (420). They are, therefore, the best contemporary records that we have regarding the experiences and feelings of the Jews in the opening decades of the Babylonian exile.

Date of chapter 1

The poem in chapter 1 is an acrostic in which each succeeding letter of the alphabet is followed by three lines. It has the usual order of the Hebrew alphabet. It vividly pictures the woes following the destruction of Jerusalem. While the feeling and language are less spontaneous than in 2 and 4, it is full of genuine pathos. It strikes many notes which run through the psalms. Jerusalem, however, is no longer entirely without inhabitants. as was probably the case in the days immediately following its destruction by the Chaldeans. The day of Jerusalem's great calamity is already a memory of the past (7) and the description of that event lacks the vividness of chapters 2 and 4. The pitiable lot of those who had come back to live on its ruined site is prominent in the mind of the poet. The taunting, malicious attitude of neighboring peoples is clearly reflected. The culmination of the poem is a fervent petition that Jehovah will speedily take vengeance upon these malignant foes. There is no suggestion that Cyrus had as yet conquered Babylon and granted to the Jews the privilege of rebuilding their sanctuary. The poem, therefore, comes in all probability from a Palestinian poet who wrote during the latter part of the Babylonian period. between 560 and 540 B.C.

Of chapter 5 Chapter 5, like 1, presents a vivid picture of the conditions in the Jewish community during the years following the destruction of Jerusalem. The memories of that event, however, are vague. It was in the days of their fathers that the nation paid the first great penalty for its guilt. For these many years (20) Jehovah has apparently forgotten and forsaken his people. The basis of the petition with which the poem concludes is that after these many years the nation has atoned for its guilt and the time has come when Jehovah should pardon and restore. In contrast with 2 and 4 the sense of national guilt is much more prominent, but there is no protestation of innocence, as in the book of Job and in the psalms which come from the middle of the Persian period. There is also no suggestion that the temple has been rebuilt or that the heavy Chaldean yoke has been removed. It is evident, therefore, that this chapter comes from about the same period as 1, that is, the latter half of the Babylonian or early in the Persian period.

Of chapter 3 Chapter 3 differs widely from the other poems in the book of Lamentations. In thought and language it is closely connected with Zechariah, Job, II Isaiah, and many of the psalms. It lacks the spontaneous feeling and vigorous literary style of the other dirges in the book of Lamentations. Its spirit and language are those of the later psalm literature. The first part of the poem is a meditation on Israel's painful experiences in the past. The strong didactic element connects it with the reflective psalms and the work of Israel's wise men which culminated in the Greek period. The tone of this poem is deeply religious. The love and mercy of God are pictured with remarkable effectiveness and appreciation. The poem is apparently made up of fragments of psalms which have been adjusted to the acrostic structure and brought into a loose literary unity. Its dependence upon the later writings of the Old Testament is so great, and it is so far removed from the problems of the Babylonian period, that it is difficult to assign it to a date earlier than the last half of the Persian or the first part of the Greek period.

STRUCTURE AND AUTHORSHIP OF LAMENTATIONS

The author of chapter 3, who may have been the final editor of the book of Lamentations, evidently modelled his work after chapters 2 and 4. He has not only adopted the unusual order of the Hebrew alphabet found in these chapters but also introduced his poem between these two earlier laments. Chapter 1 was probably given its position at the beginning of the book because of its vivid description of the desolation of Jerusalem. It also furnished a fitting introduction to the book as a whole. Chapter 5 was placed at the end because even a casual reader would at once recognize that it reflected conditions a generation or two after the great catastrophe of 586 B.C. It is thus possible to trace with reasonable assurance the growth and history of the little book of Lamentations, which, though one of the shortest books of the Old Testament, represents the work of at least three different authors and reflects the thought of as many centuries. Like many of the psalms, it reflects the unassuaged sorrow but invincible faith and hope in the heart of the Jewish race. Neglected by most modern readers in the Western world, it is the book which voices the woes of the orthodox Jews, who still regard themselves as exiles without a country.

THE ORIGIN AND INTERPRETATION OF THE SONG OF SONGS

The history of the Song of Songs The Song of Songs, or, as it is known in late tradition, the Song of Solomon, is one of the latest books to be included in the canon of the Old Testament. Not only is it found in the third and latest collection of writings, but its position was questioned by the famous rabbi Aquiba as late as the first half of the second Christian century. Josephus's statement (Contra Apion 18) that twenty-two books were included in the sacred scriptures of his race suggests that by the last quarter of the first Christian century the Song of Songs had already been included by common consent in the canon; but there is a significant absence of any reference to the book in the Jewish and Christian writings preceding this period. Certain references in the Mishna imply that there were some rabbis who still maintained the natural interpretation of the Song of Songs; but it was probably in the end given a place in the canon because of its allegorical interpretation and because it was associated with the name of Solomon.

Its allegorical interpretation

Under the influence of the allegorizing tendencies current in contemporary Greek thought the Jews of Palestine as well as of the dispersion, during the centuries immediately preceding and following the beginning of the Christian era, were inclined more and more to read into the earlier scriptures deeper spiritual meanings. To this tendency the Song of Songs, with its fervid Oriental figures and its passionate feeling, readily lent itself. The result was that the ingenuity of the Jewish scribes found in it an elaborate allegorical history of the relations between Jehovah and his people from the days of the exodus to the dawn of the messianic era. Following the example of the Jewish scribes, the early Christian Fathers devoted much attention to the allegorical interpretation of the Song of Songs. ing Christ with the bridegroom, they regarded the bride as the representative either of the Church or else of the soul of the Christian. Huge volumes were written by such scholars as Origen, developing this allegorical interpretation. They remain as monuments to the absurd extreme to which this method leads its followers. In later generations it became a favorite occupation of different commentators to find in it new allegorical meanings. Fully a score of these different allegorical theories have been propounded each differing from and confounding all others. The blasphemous absurd ities of some of these allegorical interpretations to-day need no refutation.

Even during the period when the allegorical method of interpretation was regnant, saner scholars were found to raise their voices in protest. The Its brilliant and courageous Theodore of Mopsuestia, who connected the song with the Egyptian marriage of Solomon, was condemned as a heretic by the second council of Constantinople in 553 A.D., and the Church took its stand squarely on the allegorical interpretation of the book. It was not until the Protestant Reformation had unchained the Bible that scholars began again to recognize the natural, naïve character of the Song of Songs.

With the recognition that the Song of Songs was an expression of human Its dralove between man and woman, two types of dramatic interpretation arose. matic interpretation arose. According to the one, it is a series of dialogues between King Solomon and pretahis peasant bride. The other dramatic theory found in it three characters: the heroine, a beautiful Shulammite maiden; her shepherd lover, to whom she remained true; and King Solomon, who sought by promises and flattery to win her affections and thus to induce her to remain in his harem. The latter theory is still held, but by a diminishing number of interpreters. It is alluring because of its highly dramatic theme and the practical moral lesson which it sets forth. Its most ardent advocates are forced, however, to confess that at many points the interpretation is based upon the ingenious suggestions of the interpreters rather than upon any definite data contained in the poem itself. Furthermore, the dramatic interpretation assumes the Western ideas and customs of love-making and ignores the fixed customs and very different ideals with which the Eastern world hedges in the institution of marriage. It fails to recognize the fact that the speeches and acts which it implies would have been impossible in an ancient Oriental kingdom, least of all under a despotic monarch like Solomon. Many of the scenes, into which this intricate Western dramatic theory divides the little book of eight chapters, do not at the most require more than a minute, if publicly presented, and the whole less than half an hour. It assumes that the concluding chapter records the Shulammite's farewell to Solomon that she may go and wed her shepherd lover; but in the heart of the book (36-51) there are repeated references to the public wedding ceremony which imply that this had already taken place.

Later studies of the wedding customs that still prevail in Palestine and Light Syria and of the songs that are sung on these festal occasions leave little doubt regarding the true character and meaning of the Song of Songs. In a famous article published by the German traveller Wettstein, in Bastian's Zeitschrift für Ethnologie of 1873, a vivid description is given of the wedding ceremonies observed by the inhabitants of the regions east of Jordan and in the vicinity of Damascus. Before the marriage feast, which is held in the evening at the home of the bride's parents, there are processions and songs. The bride, attired in her wedding-garments, with sword in hand, dances before the attendant guests, who sing her charms with characteristic Oriental license. After the wedding there is a seven days' feast called the Kina's Week, in which the bride and groom are daily placed upon an improvised throne and saluted as king and queen. The king, having captured his bride, is acclaimed victor by the attendant guests. Songs are sung in turn by the bride and groom and their friends, describing in detail and without reserve the physical charms of the pretended king and queen. The bride is acclaimed the fairest among women and for a brief time she tastes the joys of regal pomp.

Significance of the historic allusions in the Song of Songs

This custom evidently explains the otherwise obscure references to Solomon and the Shulammite. As Budde has truly said, the historic Solomon figures no more in the Song of Songs than in the Sermon on the Mount, where the lilies are said to be more beautiful than Solomon in all his glory (Mt. 629). He is simply the grand monarch who in later Oriental tradition was the superlative type of royal magnificence. Thus in 15 the sunburnt Shulammite is likened to the curtains of Solomon; in 37 the palanquin upon which the bridegroom is borne on his wedding-day is called the litter of Solomon. In memory of Israel's early glories the attendants of the bride are, in 311, called daughters of Jerusalem and the bridegroom is addressed as King Solomon. In 68 the simple love of the bride and groom is contrasted with the artificial splendor of Solomon's harem. In 811, 12 the bride contentedly compares her humble lot with Solomon's wealth and magnificence. Similarly, the term Shulammite is used interchangeably with the phrase the most beautiful of women. It is clearly equivalent to the modern title queen that is applied to the peasant bride during her wedding week. It was apparently suggested by the story of Abishag the Shulammite, the fairest maiden of Israel, who was chosen as the consort of David in his old age, and whom, later, Adonijah, the king's oldest son, sought, at the cost of his life, to make his bride (I Kgs. 1³, 2¹³⁻²⁵). The popular story regarding Abishag was well calculated to make a profound impression upon the minds of the peasants of Palestine. Such passages as 14, 12 and 65 imply that the heroine of the Song of Songs was for the time treated as a queen. In the opening chapter the contrast between the transcendent beauty and royal honors attributed to her by her attendants and her own peasant features and simple tastes is the dominant motif.

Biblical references to marriage customs The Bible contains few references to the details of the ancient Hebrew marriage ceremony. The two famous marriages recorded in the Old Testament are those of Jacob in Genesis 29 and of Samson in Judges 14. In each case the wedding-feast was held in the home of the bride. The culmination of the marriage ceremony was the leading home of the bride by the bridegroom. From Genesis 29⁵ it may be inferred that the Hebrew bride was veiled. Both the bride and the bridegroom were accompanied by attendant friends. Jeremiah 7³⁴ refers to the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride, implying that in ancient times, as to-day, they joined with their friends in the wedding-songs which were then sung.

Modern Palestinian weddingsongs Dalman, in his Palästinischer Diwan, has confirmed and supplemented the data earlier collected by Wettstein regarding the Palestinian wedding customs. On the day preceding the wedding-feast the bride comes out from her home dressed in her wedding-garments, bearing two torches in her hand, and sings certain songs in which the attendant maidens and occasionally the bridegroom respond or take up the refrain. At certain points one female singer joins in and the chorus repeats the verse. Two versions of this antenuptial bride song or parade song, as it is called, have been preserved (Dalman, 254-261). The Nazareth version, in which the attendant guests first speak, may be translated as follows:

Attendants:

March hither, in the name of God, thou Fair One, Thou rose in the garden of flowers! The carnation blossom, O bride, And the jasmin o'ershadow us.

Stand up. Mount thy throne; The doves coo to thee,
The queen herself ministers to thee,
Thou Arab maiden, thou fair one!

Stand up! go into the guest room. See, what does thy bridegroom lack! O my lord, he increases his wealth That he may liberally give thee the purse of gold.

Bridegroom:

She went past me with Egyptian earrings, All the fish of the sea bestir themselves; I will bring thee to my breast, And lay thee to sleep on the heavenly bed.

Attendants:

When they came to bring thee, They set thee on the wagon; They paid a hundred lira to thy father, O thou bride! O thou bride, thou fair one!

Bridegroom:

Stand up and come to me,
Thou with the rose red garment,
By the life of thy distinguished father
O bride, as thou marchest about.

Attendants:

She puts on the wooden shoes to walk about, In order to walk about until she eats at night—'By the life of my father I eat not Without a great number of songs.'

Bridegroom:

Remain standing proudly before me, O sweet one, thou hast disturbed my mind. And the gain—thou art my possession, O thou bride. O my eyes!

Attendants:

The daughter of nobles marches about With two kindled torches—Rise up. Mount thy high throne, By the life of thy esteemed father.

Bride:

By the life of my father I go not up Without eight maid-servants:
Two on account of the fashion,
Two on account of the room,
Two to loosen my buttons,
Two for the heavenly bed.

Songs sung by the bride's attendants Similar songs are sung by the attendants when the bride is given to the groom and also when the bridegroom receives the bride. The one sung by two of the wedding guests when the bride is given to the groom concludes with the words:

When thou goest into the garden of flowers, sittest in thy happiness By God, think of us and we will not forget thee.

Songs are also sung as the bride dances before the guests. In one song the bride sings the first half of the line, as she dances, while the chorus answers with the second half. All the attendant guests beat the time by clapping their hands.

A late collection of Hebrew love and marriage songs

These modern wedding customs furnish the key for the interpretation of the Song of Songs. Many figures and allusions that are meaningless to the Western reader become clear in the light of still existing Oriental customs. The Hebrew text, by means of its verbal and pronominal forms, also indicates, in nearly every case, the gender of the one addressed. The Song of Songs is not a drama but a collection of love and marriage songs sung or recited in connection with the different scenes in the ancient Hebrew wedding ceremony. Apparently, they are arranged in the same general order in which they were used, although many rearrangements have been proposed by modern scholars. They were written from the same point of view and probably all put in form by the same editor. The presence of certain Aramaic, Greek, and Persian words, and the constant use of the late form of the Hebrew relative pronoun, indicate that they were probably written during the Greek period.

Suggestions of literary unity Their dramatic form may also reflect the influence of contact with Greek literature and thought. There are suggestions throughout these songs of a certain literary unity. Thus, for example, the bride is repeatedly spoken of as a garden (e. g., 4^{12} , $6^{2.3}$). This figure, however, is still used in the modern Arab wedding-songs. It is also found in an ancient Egyptian song which a maiden sang to her lover. Here, however, the lover, not the bride, is likened to a garden. This Egyptian poem also suggests many other points of likeness with the Song of Songs:

ORIGIN AND INTERPRETATION OF SONG OF SONGS

I am thy favorite sister. And thou art to me as a garden. Which I have planted with flowers And all kinds of fragrant herbs. Fair is the spot, where'er we be. If only thy hand is laid upon mine; Pensive is our mood and happy our heart. Because we are together. To hear thy voice is like a draught of wine. And to listen to thee is life to me! To see thee is better far To me than eating and drinking!

Throughout the Song of Songs the bridegroom is likened to King Solomon and the bride's attendants are spoken of as the daughters of Jerusalem. But this was but a part of the dramatic symbolism which characterizes even the modern Palestinian wedding. Another mark of unity is the keen appreciation of the simple beauties of nature that runs through all the songs. An allusion like that in 16 to the bride's features, browned by the sun because of her life out in the vineyards, is explained in a later song (812). Similar refrains recur throughout the book, as, for example, in 217, 46, and 814. The following refrain, in slightly variant forms, concludes several of the songs $(2^7, 3^5, 8^4)$:

> I adjure you, O daughters of Jerusalem. By the gazelles or by the hinds of the field. That you stir not up nor awaken love until it please.

In the opening section (12-35) the bride is apparently in her home sur- Loverounded by her attendant maidens, who are probably aiding her in preparing for the coming wedding ceremony. Then she receives a visit from her plighted lover. The bride frankly expresses her love and yearnings for him and for the joys of marriage, while her attendants at times join with her. During the recital the bride recalls certain of the scenes that preceded the open plighting of her love, as, for example, in 23-6, 8-17, and sings certain songs which are love poems rather than mere wedding-songs. Oriental customs give little or no opportunity for the open expression of love except on the eve of the wedding ceremony. Then the bride is not only free but is expected to express without restraint and in superlative terms the character and intensity of the love which she feels for the man who is soon to become her husband. In the East, where the parents of the bride and groom arrange all the preliminaries of the marriage, this is the Oriental equivalent of the Occidental period of courtship.

The song in 36-11 is evidently sung by the wedding guests and proclaims The definite the approach of the bridegroom to his bride. He is likened to Solomon and is surrounded by his male friends who, in keeping with the dramatic representation, are called mighty warriors. The song in 41-51 voices the bridegroom's praise of his bride and culminates in the public plighting of their troth. In the next scene (5^2-6^3) the bride is apparently again alone with her companions, and she describes in characteristic Oriental figures the attractions of her lover. In 6^4-8^4 the attendant guests unite with the bridegroom in describing the charms of the bride as she dances before them. This scene also concludes with a public avowal of her love. The last scene (8^{5-14}) represents the culmination of the wedding ceremony, when the bridegroom conducts his bride to his home. At the threshold of her new life she protests her love for her husband in words unsurpassed for beauty and depth of feeling. She also glories in her tested virtue and expresses her contentment with her humble lot.

Aim of the Song of Songs

The aim of the author of the Song of Songs was evidently to present a ritual to be used in the wedding ceremonies that would be both noble and chaste. Doubtless he drew his material from the love and wedding songs that had long been current among the people of Palestine. Some of them may well come from the days preceding the exile, when the memory of the glories of Solomon's kingdom and the story of Abishag the Shulammite, the fairest maiden of Israel, were still fresh in the minds of the people. Possibly the poet has preserved the songs that were actually sung at a certain wedding where he was a guest. There are personal allusions, as, for example. in 85, which favor this conclusion; but in general these songs are generic; that is, they are adapted to use at any peasant wedding ceremony. While they do not adequately present the sanctity and beauty inherent in our modern ideal of marriage, for that ideal was unknown to the East, they do extol nobly and exquisitely the sanctity and beauty of true love between man and woman. Nowhere in literature has this divine passion been more beautifully described than in the words which the bride addresses to her husband as she enters his home, thereby making complete the marriage relation:

> Love is as strong as death; Jealousy is as irresistible as Sheol; Its flames are flames of fire, A very flame of Jehovah. Many waters cannot quench love, Nor can floods drown it.

Its charm and permanent value

These songs reflect the naïveté and the passion of the Eastern world and the roguishness and simplicity of the early peasant life. The simplicity of the country maiden and her contentment with her plain lot stand in strong contrast to the fulsome praise heaped upon her by her friends and attendants. The description of the charms of the bride and bridegroom are characterized by that concreteness and frankness which distinguish the Oriental poetry even of to-day from that of the Western world. The tropical luxury of the figures at times produces a jarring effect upon our Western ears, and yet in their descriptions of springtime and in their love of nature and of the simple joys of life the poems of the Song of Songs command a high place in the world's literature. While the book lacks the lofty religious teachings that characterize many of the prophetic writings, its literary beauty, its reflection of the life and customs of the early Hebrews, and its strong and effective emphasis on the importance of pure and true love between man and woman vindicate its place among those marvellous writings which aim to deal with every phase of human experience.

MUSIC AND SONG IN THE TEMPLE SERVICE

Music and musical instruments among the Egyptians

THE biblical references to music and song in connection with Israel's religion are so few that they leave scores of questions unanswered. Hebrews, however, in their art and material civilization, followed closely the example of their more advanced neighbors on the east and west. The clearest illustrations of musical instruments that come from the Jewish race are found at Rome on the Arch of Titus, which commemorates the destruction of the Jewish state; but the Egyptian, Babylonian, and Assyrian monuments contain many suggestive pictures of music and musical instru-These are supplemented by references in the inscriptions themselves, so that through the records of these ancient peoples it is possible to gain a reasonably definite conception of the place of music among the ancient Hebrews. On a tablet of the Sumerian king Urukagina, who lived about 3200 B.C., definite provision is made for the salary of his temple sing-Far back in the old Egyptian kingdom one of the chief court officials was the director of the royal music. Music both in Babylonia and Assyria was the almost invariable accompaniment of song. In Egypt the musicians were men, who ordinarily sang as they played. They were also frequently accompanied by women, who danced as they sang. In one ancient bas-relief the women are represented as playing on castanets and tambourines. From the famous Tell-el-Amarna letters comes a picture of a harpist accompanied by seven blind singers who are clapping their hands in Oriental fashion in order to mark time. In the tomb of Ramses III, who lived about the time of the Hebrew settlement of Canaan, two Egyptian priests are represented as playing on beautifully constructed harps with ten to twelve strings. The harp appears to have been a native Egyptian instru-The lyre—the Egyptian name of which is practically identical with the Hebrew—was evidently an importation from Asia. On one Egyptian monument a Bedouin, with unmistakable Semitic countenance, is pictured playing on a crude lyre. Another famous Egyptian picture portrays an ancient orchestra with six players, all of whom are women; a large, standing harp with thirteen strings, a lyre, a lute, a smaller harp carried over the shoulder, and a double flute can clearly be distinguished. The sixth woman is clapping her hands to beat time. A collection of ancient Sumerian and Babylonian hymns, originally intended to be used in connection with the cult at Ur, contains this suggestive addendum:

To the temple of the god let us go with a song of petition upon a lyrc, The psalmists shall sing,

MUSIC AND SONG IN THE TEMPLE SERVICE

The psalmists a chant of lordly praise shall sing, The psalmists a chant upon a lyre shall sing.*

On an elaborate Assyrian bas-relief coming from the reign of Ashur- Among banipal, the great patron of art and literature, an orchestra is portrayed consisting of twenty-six performers. The instruments include seven port-lonians able harps, one dulcimer, two double flutes, and a drum. These instruments are all played by men, but the players are accompanied by four women and nine children arranged in order of size and all clapping their hands to mark time. It is interesting to note that the members of this ancient Semitic band are represented in the act of singing, for one woman is compressing her throat with her hand, as do the modern Orientals, in order to produce the shrill, high tremolo. Another slab in the British Museum pictures Semitic captives, possibly Hebrews, playing on lyres as they march in procession before an Assyrian soldier. The picture vividly recalls the statement in Psalm 1371-3 that the Hebrew captives hung their harps on the poplars as they sat weeping beside the rivers of Babylon:

For there our captors demanded of us words of song. They who spoiled us commanded, 'Sing for us a song of Zion.'

A few references in the Old Testament suggest the character of the musical instruments in use among the Hebrews. In Judges 1134 it is stated that ent Jephthah's daughter came out with tambourines and dances to meet the musical instruwarriors as they returned from their victories over the Ammonites. Accord-ments ing to the ancient story in I Samuel 105, 10, Saul, after leaving Samuel, met by the a band of prophets with a lyre, a tambourine, a flute, and a harp. Psalm Hebrews 1503-5 contains a summary of the musical instruments later employed by the Israelites in connection with their religious services:

Praise him with the blast of the horn. Praise him with the harp and lyre. Praise him with the timbrel and dance, Praise him with strings and pipe. Praise him with sounding cymbals, Praise him with clashing cymbals.

Six instruments are here mentioned by name. The horn, or trumpet, mentioned first, was probably one of the earliest musical instruments used by the Hebrews. It was simply the ram's horn adapted to musical use. It appears from the references to it that it was used chiefly in announcing the beginnings of the year of jubilee and the important festivals. Psalm 813, 4 reads:

> Blow the trumpet at the new moon, At the full moon, on our feast day; For it is a statute for Israel. An ordinance of the God of Jacob.

^{*} Langdon, Sum. and Bab. Hymns, 70.

Trumpets were also blown by the priest to indicate the different stages in the temple service. The two trumpets pictured on the Arch of Titus at Rome are straight and long and have flaring, bell-like ends. They were probably made of metal. Several instruments of percussion were known to the Hebrews. The tambourine, or timbrel, was used in connection with the popular dances and in connection with religious music of the most joyous character. Psalm 81 begins:

Sing aloud to God, our strength, Shout to the God of Jacob, Raise a song and sound the timbrel, The pleasant lyre with the harp.

Lyre and harp As among the Egyptians and Babylonians, the lyre and harp were apparently the favorite instruments. There is no means of determining their exact Hebrew form except from the Assyrian bas-reliefs. The two harp-like instruments pictured on the late Jewish coins are vase-shaped, with three or four vertical strings extending from the base to a cross piece above which rests on supports rising on either side. The lyre and the harp were used only on joyful occasions, such as feasts and happy religious services. The harp among the Hebrews appears to have been consecrated almost entirely to worship. In I Chronicles 15²⁰ there is a reference to harps set to female voices. The same musical direction is found in the superscription to Psalm 46. The implication is that the harp was pitched high and used to accompany soprano voices.

Wind nstrunents Of the wind instruments, the flute is the most important. Originally it was made of reed, but later of wood bored through, as its Hebrew name indicates. There were many varieties of flutes. The more primitive had only three or four holes while the later appear to have had seven, covering the entire octave. The double flute, or Pan's pipe, was in common use among the Babylonians and Egyptians and probably among the Hebrews. The more sombre music of the flute was the common accompaniment of mourning and of the sadder and more pensive songs. There is a Jewish tradition that in the second temple there was a primitive pipe-organ provided with a leather bellows and a wind-box with ten openings. Into each of these openings a pipe with ten holes was fitted, so that it was possible to obtain from the organ one hundred distinct tones. Inasmuch as the hydraulic organ was discovered by Ctesibias about 250 B.C., it is possible that some such organ was used in the later temple.

Music and song in the pre-exilic temples

The picture of the Egyptian priests playing on harps implies that musical instruments were used by the people of the Nile in connection with their religious services. During the days of the new empire one of the chief functions of the Egyptian queen was to lead the female singers in the ritual. In Babylonia and Assyria most of the musicians appear to have been priests. The few allusions in the pre-exilic Old Testament records imply that from the earliest times both music and song played an important part in the religious life of the people. The band of prophets who were prophesying.

MUSIC AND SONG IN THE TEMPLE SERVICE

that is, probably giving expression to their ecstasy in song to the accompaniment of lyre, tambourine, and harp, were coming from the high place where they had evidently been worshipping. The ancient record in II Samuel 614 states that David was dancing (probably whirling) before Jehovah with all his might, as he with all Israel brought the ark of Jehovah to Jerusalem with shouting and the sound of the trumpet. Elisha, according to II Kings 315, in order to prophesy, called for a minstrel, for whenever the minstrel played the power of Jehovah came upon him. The most significant statement is that of the prophet Amos, as he preached, probably on a festal occasion at the royal sanctuary at Bethel:

> Banish from me the noise of your songs. For to the melody of your lyres I will not listen. $(5^{23}.)$

Lamentations 27 also contains the important statement:

The foreign conquerors have made a din in Jehovah's house as in the day of solemn assembly.

Clearly, music and song were both used by the Hebrews of the pre-exilic period in connection with their temple worship, but there is no evidence that there was a special class of singers. Ezekiel, in his elaborate description of the temple officials and of the temple itself, makes no reference to them or to any special provision for this part of the ritual. It is even more significant that the detailed laws of the Pentateuch contain no references to temple singers or to their support. The natural conclusion, therefore, is that there was no special class but that the singing at the pre-exilic Hebrew sanctuaries was voluntary and that the assembled worshippers as a whole participated in it. The simple music required was probably, as in Egypt and Babylonia, supplied by the priests of each sanctuary.

Isaiah 3029, 32, although post-exilic, suggests the nature of the early song Nature services in connection with the temple:

A song shall you have on your lips, as on a night when a feast is celebrated. And you shall have gladness of heart like the one who sets forth with a flute To go to the Mount of Jehovah, to the Rock of Israel.

In the traditional account of the transfer of the ark to Jerusalem in the days of David the author of I Chronicles 1519-24 has given a vivid picture of the musical customs in vogue at least during the Greek period when he lived: So the singers Heman, Asaph and Ethan, were to sound aloud on cymbals of brass, while other singers played on lyres set to female voices . . . and with harps set to the octave to lead. . . . And certain other priests blew the trumpet before the ark of God. In its poetic paraphrase of this tradition Psalm 6824, 25 completes the picture:

They have seen thy procession, O Jehovah, The processions of my God, my King to the sanctuary; The singers went before; behind the musicians; In the midst maidens playing on timbrels.

In the original text preserved in I Esdras 4⁶² it is stated that the exiles who returned after their liberation by Cyrus praised the God of their fathers . . . and exulted seven days with music and rejoicing. The fiftieth chapter of Ben Sira contains the most detailed picture of the post-exilic temple service, probably as it was observed on the day of atonement:

Then shouted the sons of Aaron,
They blew on the trumpets of beaten work,
They blew and sent forth a mighty blast,
As a remembrance before the Most High.
Then all the people together hasted,
They fell down with their faces to the ground,
To worship their Lord, the Almighty God, Most High.
The singers also praised him with their voices;
In the whole house was there made sweet melody. (15-18.)

The music of the second temple

From these vivid descriptions and from the nature of the instruments used in connection with the Hebrew worship it is possible to draw certain definite inferences regarding the character of the music used in the services of the second temple. The music employed by the Jews to-day throws little light on the problem, for it has preserved few, if any, of the old mel-The instruments employed and the musical terms used in the psalms indicate that Hebrew music was strident and noisy. Harmony in our modern sense was apparently unknown, even as it is to the Turks and Persians and Arabs to-day. This does not mean that Hebrew music was necessarily dissonant. A modern Arab chorus almost always sings in unison. The melody is not appreciated by an Occidental because it is rhythmical rather than harmonious. II Chronicles 513 contains the suggestive statement: Both the trumpeters and the singers were as one, making one sound to praise Jehovah. This probably means that the trumpeters all played together on the same note during the pauses, while the voices sang the air in unison. The superscriptions to a few of the psalms suggest that the melody was sometimes reduplicated in octaves. As a matter of fact, the octave was known at a very early period. The religious scale was probably diatonic, each song being sung on one prevailing key. The pauses were determined by the sense of the passage. Unlike our modern chants, interpretation of the ideas was the chief end sought and the melody was entirely secondary. The monotony was still further relieved by the introduction of antiphonal or alternating choruses. Unfortunately, the directions regarding the change of speakers or choruses, if they ever existed, have been lost, so that it is necessary to infer from the contents of the psalms themselves how the different parts were intended to be rendered. Like the weird, fascinating music which is still used by certain Mohammedan sects in connection with their religious services, the music and songs of the ancient Hebrews undoubtedly made a powerful emotional impression upon the worshippers. Unlike some of our complicated modern music, it never concealed but ever aided in revealing the thoughts and feelings which it was intended to interpret, and thus served to establish the sense of a close, intimate relation between the worshippers and their God.

The prominence given to the temple singers by later Judaism is an index History of the popular appreciation of the important place held by music and song of the temple in the ritual. The history of the temple singers is enveloped in much obscurity. The chief sources of information are (1) the superscriptions to the psalms, (2) the testimony of the author of Chronicles, who was himself a temple singer and intensely interested in this class, and (3) the data found in the later Jewish writings. One of the older groups of songs in the Psalter (42-49) is dedicated to the sons of Korah. These were apparently a guild of temple singers, called the sons of Korah, even as the early Hebrew priests were called the sons of Levi and the prophetic guilds the sons of the prophets. Another group of psalms, apparently coming from a little later period, are similarly dedicated to the sons of Asaph. Two later psalms (88, 89) are associated with the names of Heman and Ethan. The implication, therefore, of these superscriptions is that the oldest group of singers bore the name sons of Korah and that the other guilds came into existence, or at least into prominence, at later periods. This conclusion is in general confirmed by the writings of the Chronicler. In his version of the census of the Judean community, found in Ezra 241 and the parallel passage in Nehemiah 744 and also in Nehemiah 1122, the temple singers are known simply as the sons of Asaph. These lists apparently represent conditions in the Judean community during the latter part of the Persian and the earlier part of the Greek periods. There is no evidence that the temple singers were originally drawn from the ranks of the Levites. Their membership in the musical guilds probably depended upon their inclinations and ability. In Nehemiah 10²⁸ they are ranked side by side with the porters and temple servants.

In the days of the Chronicler, however (circa 250 B.c.), the older guild Forof the sons of Korah had apparently disappeared and are represented simply by the sub-guild of Heman. This is directly implied by the Chronicler Korah in I Chronicles 633-37, where he makes Heman a descendant of Korah. It is also confirmed by the superscription to Psalm 88, which is classified as a psalm of the sons of Korah; but in the latter part of the superscription it is also designated as a Maskil of Heman the Ezrahite. Why the sons of Korah lost their prestige must remain a question of conjecture. According to I Chronicles 919 and 261. 19 and elsewhere in the writings of the Chronicler the Korahites were simply doorkeepers and guardians of the temple. Possibly the late priestly story in Numbers 16 regarding the rebellion of the Korahites and of the signal judgment that overtook them is the late traditional record of a rebellion of this guild of temple singers against the regular priests. These were designated in post-exilic days as the sons of Aaron, that is, the guild of priests that guarded the ark (Hebrew nr. ark). In II Chronicles 2019, however, the Chronicler speaks of the Korahites as singers, but he assigns their activity to an early period in Israel's history, thus confirming the conclusions already drawn: In the days of Jehoshaphat the Levites of the sons of the Kohathites and of the sons of the Korahites stood up to praise Jehovah the God of Israel with an exceedingly loud voice.

Position of the temple singers during the Persian and Greek periods

The Chronicler also identifies the three guilds of temple singers of his day with the Levites and in his characteristic way traces their appointment to the days of David. Thus I Chronicles 1518, 17 reads: David also commanded the chief of the Levites to appoint their kinsmen the singers with instruments of music, lyres, harps, and cymbals, who should raise shouts of rejoicing. So the Levites appointed Heman, the son of Joel; and of his kinsmen Asaph, the son of Berechia and of the sons of Merari, their kinsman, Ethan, the son of Kushaiah. These data indicate rather clearly the history of the temple singers during the Persian and Greek periods. The absence of any reference to them in contemporary writings and in the Pentateuch imply that they did not become prominent until the latter part of the Persian period after Nehemiah had restored the walls of Jerusalem and the priestly law associated with Ezra had been instituted. Their growing prominence was one of the results of the emphasis which the late priestly law and the leaders of the Judean community placed upon the temple and its ritual. It is contemporaneous with the growth of the Psalter and the increasing importance of the song service. The guild of the Korahites appears to have flourished during the middle and latter part of the Persian period and to have been originally distinct from the priests and Levites. Before the close of the Persian period the sons of Asaph succeeded, in part, at least, to the position and prestige at first held by the sons of Korah. Possibly the sons of Asaph, as the Chronicler states, were enlisted from the Levites. Their non-Levitical origin may explain why the sons of Korah were gradually set aside, so that by the days of the Chronicler they had no part in the song service of the temple. At least it is certain that by the middle of the Greek period the three contemporary guilds of singers known as the sons of Asaph, of Heman, and of Ethan or Jeduthun (I Chr. 251. 6) were classified as Levites and were in charge of the song service of the temple. The presence of three guilds also indicates the growing numbers and importance of this class of temple servants. In I Chronicles 24¹⁻¹⁹ and 25 the Chronicler states that, like the priests, they had become so numerous that they were divided into twenty-four courses and that each course ministered in turn at the temple while the others returned to their homes and turned their attention to other occupations. The rapidly increasing importance of music and of the singer class illustrates forcibly the growing emphasis which later Judaism placed upon the ritual and upon the expression of religion in public worship. The next step in Jewish thought was by analogy to transfer this elaborate system of song service from earth to heaven and to think of God himself as surrounded by choirs of angelic singers ever chanting his praises. Thus the dominant ritualistic tendency of later Judaism transformed and reshaped human beliefs regarding the ways in which God should be served not only on earth but also in the life beyond death.

VI

THE LITERARY AND HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF THE PSALTER

Modern discovery and research have demonstrated that at least two millenniums of intense human struggle and earnest religious thought lie back of the Hebrew Psalter. Centuries before the days of Moses and David the ancient Sumerians, Egyptians, and Babylonians developed a hymnology that in volume and literary form, if not in spirit and content, was startlingly like that of the Hebrews. In one ancient inscription the titles of over one hundred Sumerian and Babylonian hymns are given. These ancient hymns for public service were classified according to the musical instruments that were to be used with them. Some were to be sung with the flute, some with the lyre, and others probably with the bagpipe. The poetic structure of these ancient hymns is also clearly indicated on the clay inscriptions. As in modern poetry, each succeeding line begins anew at the left of the page. Where longer metres are employed, the pause in the middle of each line is also marked.

A few of the older Sumerian hymns strike noble chords. The most sig- Hymns nificant are the hymns and prayers addressed to Enlil, the old god of Nip- to Enlil pur. One opens with the significant words:

O Enlil, counsellor, doth any one comprehend thy form? The strength-begifted lord of the harvest lands. Created in the mountains, lord of the grain-fields. Warrior who possesseth great strength, father Enlil, Thou art the powerful prince of the gods, For creating posterity thou sustainest life, As the air, thou art all-pervading.

Another psalm which is really a lament addressed to Enlil begins:

O honored one, relent, behold thy city!

O exalted and honored one, relent, behold thy city!

O lord of the lands, relent, behold thy city!

O lord of unerring word, relent, behold thy city. Enlil, father of Sumer, relent, behold thy city!

The little ones perish, the great ones perish, Her booty the dogs defile,

Her pillage the rude foe defiles, In her banqueting hall the wind revels.

Amenhotep IV's hymn to Aton A large number of hymns sung to the gods have come down from the beginnings of Egyptian history. The crowning product of this wide-spread tendency to worship the gods with song and musical accompaniment is the famous hymn in praise of Aton by the great reforming king Amenhotep IV. It opens with the majestic passage:

Thy dawning is beautiful in the horizon of heaven,
O living Aton, beginning of life!
When thou risest in the eastern horizon of heaven,
Thou fillest every land with thy beauty;
For thou art beautiful, great, glittering, high over the earth;
Thy rays, they encompass the lands, even all thou hast made.
Thou art Re, and thou hast carried them all away captive,
Thou bindest them by thy love.
Though thou art afar, thy rays are on earth,
Though thou art on high, thy footprints are the day.

The hymn then goes on to describe night and darkness and the god's care for men and animals in language strikingly parallel to that of Psalm 104. (Cf. § 95.) After picturing the creation of man and the animals the poem continues:

How manifold are thy works!
They are hidden from before us,
O thou sole god, whose powers no other possesseth,
Thou didst create the earth according to thy desire,
While thou wast alone:
Men, all cattle large and small,
All that are upon the earth,
That go about upon their fect;
All that are on high,
That fly with their wings.

The poem concludes with an ardent prayer by the king in his own behalf:

Thou art in my heart,
There is no other that knoweth thee,
Save thy son Ikhnaton;
Thou hast made him wise in thy designs,
And in thy might.*

Most of the Egyptian hymns are trivial and repetitious. After the remarkable burst of reforming activity under Amenholep IV, little religious progress is discernible. The later poems become mere repetitions of the Influancient hymns or else tiresome liturgies. As in art and literature, so in the of the praise of the gods, the Egyptians reached their zenith long before the beginnings of Israel's history. It is not improbable that the prominence given upon the Psaiter to the song service of the Egyptians exerted a certain influence on the Jewish worshippers at the Yahu temple, which stood for generations in the city of Elephantine, only a few yards away from a famous Egyptian shrine. In the sacred city of Memphis and in other great cities of Egypt there were ample opportunities for the Egyptians to exert at least an indirect influence upon the imitative Jews of the dispersion. With the possible exception, however, of the one hundred and fourth Psalm, it is impossible to trace a direct transference of Egyptian thought to the Jewish Psalter. The incontestable superiority of the Hebrew psalms to those which come from the land of the Nile speak conclusively against such a transfer.

Egyptian hymns

The history of the development of Babylonian and Assyrian hymnology is in many ways closely parallel to that among the Egyptians: the older hymns are the nobler; the later are little more than repetitions or slavish Assyrian hymns imitations of the older models. The same hymns were sung as late as 200 B.C. in practically the same form as in the days of Hammurabi, who lived nearly two thousand years earlier. Of these ancient psalms the hymns to Shamash, the sun-god, are the noblest. In one he is addressed as follows:

The law of mankind dost thou direct. Eternally just in the heavens art thou, Of faithful judgment towards all the world art thou; Thou knowest what is right, thou knowest what is wrong.

O Shamash! Supreme judge, great lord of all the world art thou! Lord of creation, merciful one of the world art thou! O Shamash! on this day purify and cleanse the king, the son of his god; Whatever is evil within him, let it be taken out.

Elsewhere the chief god of Babylon is thus addressed:

Powerful Marduk, whose anger is a destroying flood. Who reconciled is like a merciful father, I am oppressed by prayers without reply; Wails unheard depress me.

Sometimes these psalms or petitions are in dialogue form: first the priest presents the cause of the petitioner and then the petitioner himself speaks. In all of them there is much repetition, which reveals their liturgical purpose. They also contain references to their use in connection with the great feasts, as, for example, that of the New Year. Upon the Jewish exiles living in Babylon these elaborate services must have made a profound impression and must have emphasized the tendency, already strong, to develop this form of the ritual in connection with the second temple. Occasional echoes of the ancient Sumerian and Babylonian hymns may be traced in the Hebrew Psalter, but for the most part the older hymnology is cold and barren compared with the fervent songs later sung by the worshippers of Jehovah.

Psalms in the preexilic Hebrew temple Distinct references, like that in Amos 5²³, to the songs sung in the temple at Bethel, and, in Lamentations 2⁷, to the din on the day of solemn assembly, leave little doubt that the Hebrews, even before the exile, chanted songs at their sanctuaries on the great feast-days. In certain of the pre-exilic prophetic books, as, for example, Jeremiah 9¹⁷⁻²² and 12⁷⁻¹², are found lyrical poems which in form and content closely resemble many of the individual psalms found in the first part of the Psalter. Concerning the nature of the psalms sung in connection with pre-exilic temples there is no clear evidence. Amos appears to have regarded them with disfavor. Whether or not any of them are still preserved in the Psalter must be determined from a detailed study of the individual psalms.

Different types of psalms

The superscriptions of the individual psalms contain certain suggestions regarding the history of Old Testament hymnology. The oldest Hebrew designation of a lyric poem (shîr) is usually translated song. It is used to describe the joyous songs in Genesis 3127, Isaiah 51, 3029, the triumphal ode chanted by the Hebrew women after the great victory under the leadership of Deborah and Barak (Judg. 512), and the love-songs in the Song of Songs. It also describes the songs sung at drunken revels (Is. 24°). In every case it is the designation of joyous songs sung probably with musical accompaniments. This meaning is also implied by the Greek equivalent psalmos (from which comes the English word psalm), which means a song sung to the accompaniment of a harp or some stringed instrument. title is borne by a group of psalms which appear to be among the oldest in the Psalter. As the title implies, they are especially adapted to liturgical use. Seven psalms bear the title Miktam, which probably means chosen. All of them are ascribed to David and most of them are relatively early. Their noble style and strong emotion confirm the popular interpretation of this term. Fifty-seven psalms bear the title Mizmor. The derivation of this term is not certain, but it probably means prime, that is, psalms selected for use, possibly, in the synagogue. Thirteen psalms bear the title Maskil, which comes from the common Hebrew verb meaning to ponder, to meditate. The contents of these meditations indicate that most of them come from the circle of the wise. Their contents also suggest that they are comparatively late. These different titles clearly indicate that the Psalter consists of collections of psalms which come from different periods and from different groups of writers.

The Davidic tatles A second group of superscriptions represents the later traditions regarding the authorship of individual psalms or gives the names of famous characters in Israel's history to which they were ascribed. Seventy-four psalms in the Hebrew Bible bear the title To David. In the Greek version many other psalms are ascribed to Israel's early poet king. The meaning of this title has been differently interpreted. It is exceedingly doubtful if the Hebrew preposition to was ever used before the exile to designate authorship. In

LITERARY AND HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF THE PSALTER

Isaiah 389, which is probably post-exilic, it is used to describe a poem attributed to Hezekiah. From the beginning of the exile the use of this term to indicate possession became increasingly prominent. The Sidonian coins bear a similar inscription: To the Sidonians. The closest analogy to the title To David is the inscription, To the Sons of Korah, borne by Psalms 42-49, or the title To Asaph (e. g., Ps. 50). Clearly this title does not mean that these psalms were written by members of these guilds of singers but rather that they were either dedicated to them or written for their use. Hence the title To David must mean either a psalm dedicated to David or else one of a collection of songs made by a guild of singers who bore the historic designation David. The contents of these seventy-four so-called Davidic psalms leaves no doubt that the majority, if not all of them, were written long after the days of David. This fact lends probability to the conclusion that the title Psalm to David, like the corresponding terms Proverbs of Solomon and Law of Moses, was used to designate an early literary production the exact authorship of which was unknown, but which was by current tradition attributed to the traditional patron of this type of literature.

That the tendency in time became strong to attribute all lyric poetry The to David is confirmed not only by the title but also by the epilogue to Psalm dency 72: The Prayers of Jesse the Son of David are ended. The same tendency to attribgave rise to the third type of superscription which connects individual psalms with incidents in the life of the great king. Thirteen such superscriptions are found. These historical notes are based on the narratives in I and II Samuel after these books had received their final Deuteronomic redaction. They cannot, therefore, be earlier than the exile. It is possible that they were added by the editor who collected the so-called Davidic collection of psalms. They are scattered throughout the Psalter, beginning with the third psalm and concluding with Psalm 142.

A third type of superscription consists of the musical directions attached Musical to certain psalms. Most of them are found in connection with the psalms directions inscribed to the musical director, and they were clearly intended to facilitate the use of the psalms in the synagogue or temple service. Of these musical directions there are two types: (1) those designating the voice and (2) those indicating the tone or melody. Under the first class several, as in I Chronicles 1520, bear the title For maidens, that is, for soprano or falsetto voices. Two others (6, 12) have a musical direction that recurs in I Chronicles 15²¹. It probably means on the octave, or the lower octave. The designations of tone or melody apparently consist of the opening word or words of a popular song introduced by the phrase in accordance with. Thus, Psalm 56 was to be sung to the same tune as the popular song, The Silent Dove of Them Who Are Afar Off. The superscription to Psalms 45, 69, and 80 is probably to be translated, My Testimony is a Beautiful Anemone. The melody of Psalm 22 bears the picturesque title Hind of the Dawn. The difficulties which later translators found in interpreting these superscriptions is shown by the wide variations in the renderings. In the light of the Greek and Syriac, the superscriptions of Psalms 8, 81, and 84 should psalms to David probably be rendered, For the Wind Presses, but this is rendered by the Targum, The Harp which David Brought to Gath.

The immediate historical background of the Psalter

The final proofs regarding the date of individual psalms and, therefore, of the growth of the Psalter are the literary characteristics, the historical allusions, and the spirit and thought of each psalm; but the analogies in the development of hymnology in other religions, the occasional references in the Hebrew writings outside the Psalter, and the testimony of the superscriptions indicate beyond doubt that the growth of Israel's lyric literature was gradual and culminated in the four centuries following the destruction of Jerusalem. The immediate historical background of the majority of the psalms was clearly a period of crisis and persecution. Like the earliest Christian hymns, they were cast in the furnace of affliction. Recent discovery and biblical research have given us a new and increasingly definite knowledge of the four centuries and a half that followed the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. For the faithful Jew it was a period of intense and protracted agony relieved only by a few brief intervals of peace and prosperity. The sack of their temple and capital city, the flight of many refugees to Egypt, and the deportation of their political and spiritual leaders to Babylonia left the Jewish people dismembered and crushed. In the words of the author of Lamentations 414, 15:

They wandcred as blind men through the streets, polluted with blood; That men might not touch them they drew aside their garments: 'Unclean!' they cried to them, 'Depart, do not touch.'

Sadly he wails:

Our eyes still fail in looking, for help that is unavailing, In our watching we have watched in vain for a nation that does not help.

Hopes that centred about the rebuilding of the temple

The Jews, however, through the ages have always proved a race of optimists. Even the disaster of 586 B.C. could not crush them. Gradually their hope kindled and centred in the survivors of the house of David. Refugees came back to build their hovels on the ruins of Jerusalem and a simple ritual was instituted on the descrated temple site. The conquest of Babylon by Cyrus in 538 B.C. brought to the Jews of Palestine religious liberty and possibly inspired a handful of the exiles to come back from distant Babylonia. In 520 Haggai and Zechariah fired the zeal of the povertystricken remnant that remained in Palestine to rebuild the ruined walls of the ancient temple and to revive the sacrifices. The news of the mighty revolutions that shook the Persian Empire at the beginning of the reign of Darius led the temple builders to hope, though in vain, for the restoration of their former independence and glory under the rule of their governor, Zerubbabel, the surviving representative of the house of David. It was one of the rare moments in post-exilic history when Israel's earlier messianic hopes burst into a flame; but that flame was quickly extinguished when the rule of Darius was firmly established throughout the Persian Empire. Zerubbabel was probably banished or put to death. The high priest under a Persian governor became henceforth the civil as well as the religious head of the Jewish people.

The seventy years which followed were among the darkest and most The discouraging in all of Israel's history. They are recorded not in the annals but in the lyrics of the Old Testament. When Nehemiah came to Palestine in 445 B.C. he found the Jewish community the helpless victim of the pitiless attacks of its heathen neighbors. Worse still, he found the mass of the people robbed of their hereditary estates and enslaved by their heartless rulers. It was a period when fidelity to Jehovah and to his demands was rewarded by poverty and persecution and the taunts of those who, like Job's friends, held to the old dogma that misfortune and suffering were the inevitable proofs of sin and divine displeasure. It is probable that out of this period of anguish come the two noblest products of Israel's immortal genius, the book of Job and the rhapsodies of Isaiah 40-55. Faith, which, though crushed to earth, rose to heaven, was invincible. Apparently, it was the II Isaiah's peerless ideal of the suffering servant of Jehovah that kindled the zeal of the youthful Nehemiah in distant Susa and thus set in motion forces which not only resulted in the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem but also in the transformation of the ideals and life of Judaism.

Persian period

years of

The period which followed the work of Nehemiah was one of prosperity Closing and confidence and exultation for the Jews of Palestine. It is clearly the background of many of the most beautiful psalms in the Psalter. Through the dark, gloomy valley Jehovah had led his people forth unharmed, and now as their divine host set before them a rich table in the presence of their enemies. During the closing years of the Persian period the avenging armies of the bloody Artaxerxes Ochus traversed Palestine. How far they afflicted the Jews and left their mark upon the Psalter is not entirely clear. At about the same time the feud between Jew and Samaritan began to distort and embitter the spirit of these two kindred yet alien peoples.

The conquest of Palestine by Alexander the Great, 332 B.C., did not materially affect the fortunes of the Judean community but it greatly broadened their intellectual horizon. Many Jews followed in the wake of Alexander's conquests or else were attracted to the great cities of the eastern Mediterranean, and especially to Egypt, by the unusual opportunities offered them for commerce and trade. Flourishing Greek colonies on the borders of Syria and in Palestine itself brought the Jews into close contact with the alluring life and culture of Greece. The psalms of the Greek period show the influence of this broader outlook which came through contact with Greek thought and civilization. Joel, who lived during the latter part of the Persian period, is the last Old Testament prophet whose name we know. Henceforth the wise men, or sages, filled the place formerly occupied by the prophets. Unlike the earlier prophets who spoke to the nation, they addressed their teachings to the individual. Recognizing the great value of the lyric as a form of teaching, they presented the results of their thought and experience not only in proverbs but in psalms. Like the prophets and priests, they made a profound impression upon the Psalter.

The Maccabean struggle During the century and a half following the death of Alexander the Jews of Palestine were in turn courted or conquered by the Ptolemies of Egypt or by the Seleucid rulers of Syria. Finally, about 200 B.C., they came under the permanent control of Syria. During the next half century Greek ideas and culture made alarming inroads upon Judaism. At last the reigning high priests themselves became ardent Hellenists. Finally, however, the bitter persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes aroused the slumbering loyalty of the Jewish race. The blood of its martyrs fired the zeal of the aged priest Mattathias and his brave sons, and Israel entered upon its second great, heroic age. The valiant deeds of Saul and David were repeatedly eclipsed on hard-fought battle-fields. The faith and swords of Judas and his followers ultimately won not only religious freedom but also political independence.

Conclusions The three great crises that have left their indelible stamp upon the Psalter are (1) the destruction of Jerusalem in 586, (2) the seventy years of discouragement and petty persecution which followed the disillusionment of those who rebuilt the second temple, and (3) the bitter Maccabean struggle. The brighter, more joyous periods were (1) the few short years between 520 and 516 B.c. when the temple was being rebuilt, (2) the period of hopefulness and rejoicing following the work of Nehemiah in 445, (3) the comparatively calm though less joyous Greek period, and (4) the confident, exultant, warlike age inaugurated by the brilliant victories of Judas Maccabeus.

THE STRUCTURE AND HISTORY OF THE PSALTER

The Psalter in its present form is divided into five divisions or books. These are 1-41, 42-72, 73-89, 90-106, and 107-150. Each of these divisions is marked by a concluding doxology. Psalm 150 in itself constitutes the closing doxology. The first three divisions are natural and apparently mark successive stages in the early growth of the Psalter. The division between 106 and 107 is arbitrary, for Psalms 104-107 are in theme a literary unit. This fivefold division is the work either of the final editor of the Psalter or else of some later reviser. Its aim was probably to divide the Psalter into five divisions corresponding to the five books of the law. It emphasizes, however, the fact that the Psalter is made up of smaller collections and that, like the book of Proverbs, it grew gradually as the result of bringing different collections together. Chapter 1, which constitutes a general introduction, like the introduction to the book of Proverbs (1-9), is probably one of the latest additions to the book. Its didactic character reflects the thought of the later wise and of their successors the scribes.

The two Davidio

The oldest collection of psalms in the Psalter is clearly the so-called first Davidic collection found in 2-41. Psalm 10, which lacks the title To David, was once the second half of an acrostic of which the first is found The title of Psalm 33 is also lacking except in the Greek version. Its contents indicate that it was later inserted in this earlier collection. Another Davidic collection is found in 51-72. At the close of this collection is found the significant note, following an elaborate doxology: The prayers of David, the son of Jesse, are ended. This postscript lends force to the suggestion, made long ago by Ewald, that the first Davidic collection was once followed immediately by the second contained in 51-72. If this reconstruction be adopted it also solves another problem, for at present Psalm 50, which is dedicated to Asaph, is separated from the other Asaph psalms in 73-83 by the second Davidic collection (51-72). This restoration brings together the two great collections of psalms attributed to the temple singers, the sons of Korah and the sons of Asaph. The general character and contents of the second Davidic collection confirms the conclusion that they come from the same general point of view and from a little later period than those in the first collection.

The evidence is reasonably convincing that the majority of the sixty-two psalms in these Davidic collections (2-41, 51-72) were written during the first half of the Persian period or earlier and that the first collection was made soon after the work of Nehemiah and the priestly reforms associated with Ezra. The literary style of these psalms is vigorous and free from the Aramaisms and artificialities which characterize many of the psalms in the latter part of the Psalter. They contain few liturgical formulas and most of them are written from the individual or class point of view. In general they reflect the events following the Babylonian exile and the life of a poor, struggling community surrounded by merciless oppressors. The teachings of the pre-exilic prophets, and especially Jeremiah (e. g., Ps. 16 and 39), have made a profound impression upon the minds of the psalmists. The chief problems are those of Lamentations and of Isaiah 40-66, with which writings these psalms have many points of contact. They reveal the sufferings and the hopes of the afflicted during the days preceding the appearance of Nehemiah as well as the confidence and optimism that burst out after his advent. The editor or editors who collected them were probably inspired to do so by the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem, the revival of the Judean community, and the extension of the temple service which resulted from the work of that great Jewish layman. The fact that Psalm 14 is reproduced in 53 and 311-3 in 711-3 suggests that the second collection, 51-72, was made independently and a little later, possibly near the close of the Persian or early in the Greek period.

The Korahite psalms Psalms 42-49 bear the superscription, To the Sons of Korah. Inasmuch as these were the chief guild of singers at the Jerusalem temple during the middle and latter part of the Persian period, and were later supplanted by the guilds of Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun, it is probable that the collection of Korahite psalms comes from the same period. This dating is confirmed by their contents. The problem of innocent suffering still rests heavily upon the psalmists, but the earlier sense of guilt is lacking, even as in the contemporary prophecy of Joel. The literary style is vigorous and highly poetic. The liturgical form as well as the title of these psalms indicates that most of them were written for use in the temple service. The eight Korahite psalms (42-49) were probably added to the earlier Davidic collections about the beginning of the Greek period.

The psalms of the sons of Korah

In the second half of the Psalter the indications of historical growth are indistinct. The titles point to the work of a final editor who combined many smaller collections. The third general division opens with a collection of eleven psalms, 73–83, to which should be added Psalm 50, which in the process of editorial revision had been separated from them. These are all dedicated to the sons of Asaph, who, we may infer from the references in Chronicles, came into prominence about 250 B.C. In this collection are found certain psalms, as, for example, 74, 79, and 83, which clearly voice the feelings of the Jews while they were being ground down under the crucl heel of Antiochus Epiphanes (167–164 B.C.).

The Hallel psalms Scattered through the latter part of the Psalter are two groups of so-called Hallel psalms (104-118 and 136-150), each of which is introduced by the superscription Hallelujah, which may be interpreted: Give praise to Yah. Their contents as well as their title indicate that they were written for liturgical use. Psalms 104-107 are in reality one psalm describing Jchovah's rulership of the world and leadership of his people. Psalm 104 describes the creation, 105 the exodus, 106 Israel's early history, and 107 the later restoration. Psalms 111 and 112 constitute an acrostic. In the later Jewish ritual Psalms 113 and 114 were chanted before the Passover meal and 115-118 at its close. In the great Hallel psalm, 136, the same refrain is repeated twenty-six times. Psalms 146-149, like 150, are in reality long doxologies adapted to use in the synagogue and temple service. These Hallel psalms probably come from the latter part of the Greek and the first part of the Maccabean periods. Several of them are quoted by the Chronicler, indicating that they were probably in existence as early as 250 B.C. although they may not then have been incorporated in the Psalter.

Psalms 120-134 are a group of songs of ascent or pilgrim psalms. With The the exception of Psalm 126, they are all written in the same five-beat of asmeasure. They are characterized by original and bold figures of speech and by an intense love for Jerusalem and the temple. As a rule, their spirit is joyous and hopeful. The didactic note is strong and their point of view is in general that of the Pharisees. They probably antedate the fierce Maccabean struggle and come from the latter part of the Greek period. As their title implies, they voice the feelings of the pilgrims as they resorted to the temple at their annual feasts.

Even as the revival of the Palestinian community, following the work of The com-Nehemiah, inspired the first collection of psalms (2-41), so the Maccabean of the victories and the restoration of the temple service appear to have furnished the incentive to make new collections of psalms and to complete the canon of the Psalter. This concluding work was in all probability done during the peaceful, prosperous reign of Simon (143-135 B.C.). Contemporary records indicate that it was an age in which many new psalms were written and when great attention was given to the development of the temple ritual. This tendency was encouraged by the aged Simon, as is stated in I Maccabees 1412, 14, 15:

He made peace in the land. And Israel rejoiced with great joy. Everyone sat under his own vine and fig tree, And there was no one to make them afraid. He was full of zeal for the law. And every lawless and wicked person he banished. He made the sanctuary glorious, And multiplied the vessels of the temple.

He probably also multiplied the temple singers and elaborated the song service. Israel had good cause to sing to Jehovah a new song, for he had crowned the afflicted with victory. The Psalter closes with their song of thanksgiving:

> Let the faithful exult in glory, Let them sing for joy on their beds. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth,

And punishment on the peoples,
To bind their kings with chains,
Their nobles with fetters of iron,
To execute on them the judgment written;
It is an honor for all his faithful ones. (Ps. 149⁵⁻⁹.)

Thus the evidence is conclusive that the Psalter has a history as long and complex as the Old Testament itself. Certain of its older poems may come from the days of David, about 1000 B.c. Its later psalms breathe the war-like spirit of the Maccabean age. It represents the growth of at least eight centuries and the work of fully one hundred poets. Back of it lie two millenniums of Semitic religious history; but the psalms themselves, with few exceptions, come from the four centuries and a half that began with the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.c. They record the inspired insight, the dauntless courage, and the profound spiritual experiences of the noble souls who faced the cruel persecutions and the great crises of the Persian, Greek, and Maccabean periods. Born in stress and struggle, they have a unique message and meaning for all who are in the stream of life.

Introduction

Triumphal Odes.-Of all the varied sentiments which gave rise to lync poetry among the Triumphal Odes.—Of all the varied sentiments which gave rise to lync poetry among the ancient Hebrews, that of exultation over some warlike achievement was probably the first to find expression in song Each important victory was apparently commemorated by a triumphal ode. Most of these ancient songs appear to have been composed at the time when the events which they record transpired, and to have been first sing by the women, as the Hebrew warriors came back laden with the spoils of victory. Cf. Ex 15²¹ and §§ 3 and 4 From Ex 15²¹ and I Sam. 187 it is evident that they were accompanied with joyful music and dance. Many of them, like the majestic triumphal ode in Judg. 5, were probably preserved on the lips of the people and possibly sung by the warriors as they later went out to battle. Some, as, for example, the ode commemorating the victory over the Mosbites, Nu. 21²¹, were treasured and recited on festal occasions by the bards or professional singers. In later times some, and possibly all, of them were collected and orating the victory over the Mosbites, Nu. 21ⁿ, were treasured and recited on testal occasions by the bards or professional singers. In later times some, and possibly all, of them were collected and embodied in one of Israel's great song-books, the Book of the Wars of Jehovah or the Book of the Righteous One. Cf Introd, p. 12.

Undoubtedly, the early Israelites possessed many more of these triumphal songs than have been preserved in the OT. Those which we now have were quoted incidentally by the early prophetic historians, who evidently depended largely upon these and similar songs for the data which they have uncorporated in their prose histories. The quotations suffice, however, to give an idea of the simplicity, freshness, variety, and rare dramatic power of these ament songs. They an idea of the simplicity, freshness, variety, and rare dramatic power of these ancient songs. They also reveal clearly the aspirations and spirit and faith of the early Hebrews. No later historian acts as interpreter; but instead the primitive Israelite through them sets forth his innermost feelings and motives.

§ 1 In this very ancient fragment, perhaps the oldest in the O T, the spirit of revenge, which the early man shares with the child, is forcibly expressed. It likewise voices the principle of blood vengeance underlying the ancient law of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, which is the basis of many regulations in the Code of Hammursh as well as in the O.T codes. Cf. Vol. IV, p. 117. It is also the downwart law of the Arch to dow

The original occasion of this so-called Song of Lamech was probably a successful act of retaliation against an offending clam or tribe. The Cain alluded to in the song is evidently not the one mentioned in the much later and more familiar story of Cain and Abel in the same chapter, of. Vol. I, § 6, but possibly the ancient hero of the genealogical list, 4^{17} , who built the city of Enoch (Uruk) and who performed an act recorded in a tradition which has been lost. The first two lines are in the four-beat and the last four in the characteristic three-beat measure. For the setting of the poem, of Vol I, § 4.

§ 2 In beauty of diction, vigor of movement, and variety of figure this poem ranks as one of the noblest in the OT. Its spirit of praise and adoration connects it closely with the oldest pss.

in the Psalter, and yet the note of triumph and exultation that runs through it justifies its classification with the still older triumphal odes. Its main theme is the deliverance from the Egyptians at the Red Sea. To this event the first half of the poem is devoted, but the remainder, ii-ii, traces rapidly the experiences of the Hebrows in the wilderness, east of the Jordan, in the conquest of Canaan to the building of Solomon's temple and even to the days of Josiah and the rule of the Deuteronomic law, when Jerusalem came to be regarded as the place which Jehovah alone had chosen as his abode, ii. The point of view of at least the latter part of the song is the poind after the Babyloman exile had cast its deep pall upon the Israelitish race, for in ii there is an implied hone that Lehovah will occur restore his people to Lerusalem. hope that Jehovah will again restore his people to Jerusalem.

after the Babyloman enle had cast its deep pall upon the Israchtash race, for in 11 there is an implied hope that Jehovah will again restore his people to Jerusalem.

The two opening lines appear to have come down from the days of the exodus itself, for both the early Judean and Ephraimite narratives have retained them, although the one puts it in the mouth of Moses and the other of Miriam. Cf Vol. I, p. 176. The older version is probably that of 2, Sing ye to Jehovah, the first person in being due to attraction. Some scholars have also been inclined to see in 2, 2 and others in 1-11, 12 a Mosau kernel. While this is not impossible, the evidence that 2-15 constitute a literary unit is strong. The parallelism of the succeeding stanzas is very marked, and this corresponds to the charges in metre; the first, a stanza of four lines of five beats each, describing vividly the deliverance at the exodus. Vas. 5, 7, with lines of four beats, ropeat in different language the ascription of praise to Jehovah, and then 3-10 give another picture of the exodus. Then 11-13 repeat the ascription and the rest of the poem cites other illustrations of Jehovah's power to deliver his people. The idea of Jehovah as a warrior, 5, is a characteristic Deuteronomic figure. Cf. Dt. 150, 322. Also there are several peculiar words and grammatical forms running through the entire poem which are found elsewhere only in exhic or post-exilic writings. Both the early Judean prophetic, 10, and the late priestly versions, 5, of the exodus are in the mind of the poet, indicating that he was familiar with them in their popular, in ot in their later written composite form Cf. Vol. I, 5, 74. Hence the poem in its final form probably comes from the earlier part or middle of the Persian period.

While the original couplet, 15, 21, probably began, Sing ye to Jehovah, vs. 2 is, like many of the national pss, in the first person. This opening couplet is quoted in Is. 122 and Ps. 11814 (with the same peculiar designation, Jah, for Jehovah), as if it were th position that it really deserves.

$15" So Gk and Lat and certain Syr. MSS. Heb., Lord
$3 The authorship, date, literary characteristics, and translation of this ancient song have already been discussed in Vol. I, $139 It is the longest and noblest example of the triumphal ode in the O.T. In a series of dramatic scenes it presents the feelings of the actors and the important stages in the decisive battle which determined the mastery of Canaan and the fate of Jehovah's people. The prominence of Deborah and Jael and the tragic interest in the mother of Sisera, as she sits annously awaiting the arrival of her son, strongly suggest the feminine point of view and favor the conclusion that the author was a woman who voiced the impassioned feelings of the women as they witnessed the battle, and then, like Miriam and the women of Israel at an earlier time, or the daughters of Israel in the days of David, celebrated the victory as the conquering warriors returned.

The poem is so old and has suffered so much in transmission that it is impossible to determine the exact metre Apparently the two and three beat measures were both used. As in David's lament over Saul and Jonathan, the variations are frequent and the metrical structure untrammelled. For fragments of still older triumphant odes, cf. the song sung to commemorate the victory over the Mosbites in Nu. 21^{nb-20}, Vol. I, § 66, and over the Amontes, Josh. 10¹³. ¹³, Vol. I, § 114.

Traditional Oracles.—Among the Babylonians, the Assyrians, the Greeks, the Romans (especially during the imperial period), and among most peoples of antiquity, oracles were very common and highly appreciated. The primitive ancestors of the Hebrews, like the early Arabs, undoubtedly often resorted to the priest or prophet in order to determine what was the divine will before undertaking an important enterprise. For an interesting example of the Hebrews, cf. I Sam. 30°. The answer was probably from earliest times cast in pocitic form, as it was by Delphic priestess or Arabian kahin. The common basis of all these oracles was the universal psychological motive which impols men to seek to ascertain from the god or gods what the future is destined to bring forth. The poetre form was employed because it was deemed the more impressive and appropriate way of expressing the divine will.

psychological motive which improve the second control of the poetic form was employed because it was decined and interesting the divine will.

Early in Israel's history the oracle became the model of a peculiar type of literature. Starting with some striking fact in nature, as the peculiar habits of serpents, or in history, as the Heb. conquest of the early Canaantes, the peet-prophet presented the popular or prophetic explanation of these facts in the form of an oracular curse or blessing put in the mouth of Jehovah or some early ancestor like Noah or Jacob. As in Crammer's prediction of the reign of Queen Ehzabeth, in Shakespeare's Henry VIII, act V, seens 5, the poet writes with a detailed knowledge of the event but assumes a point of view antedating it. Sometimes he incorporated ancient proverbs or tribal songs, perhaps already attributed by tradition to some early saint. It is often difficult to determine whether the oracles originated with the prophet, who has given them their present setting, or were derived by him from some earlier source. Usually they are earlier pooms, as, for example, mine whether the oracles originated with the prophet, who has given them their present setting, or were derived by him from some earlier source. Usually they are earlier pooms, as, for example, the description of the different tribes in Gen. 49.

These ancient traditional oracles are the literary prototypes of the later Jewish apocalypsos such as are found in the books of Enoch, Daniel, and Revelation. Some of them also employ obscure language and the symbolism of animals, as do the later forms of this same peculiar literature. Some of them, like those in Gen. 49, throw light upon recondite events in the early history of the tribes. Others reflect the primitive faith of the early Hobrows; but their chief value lies in the light which they throw upon the motives and aspirations of the Israelites and the philosophy of life which guided them in the earliest stages of their national and religious development.

It possibly also included their colonies along the shores of the Mediterranean. The underlying historical fact, which this oracle formulates, is that the rich, opulent, highly civilized Canaanites were subjugated and completely absorbed by the semi-barbarous nomadic Israelites, who, in turn, as in the days of David and Solomon, made close commercial alliances with the Phoencians. Primitive thought apparently explained this strange event in the terms of this oracle, which is equivalent to saying that it was thus divinely decreed. The prophet, however, who has incorporated the oracle in its present setting, goes deeper and presents the true explanation: it was because of the moral depravity of the Canaanites and the superior moral and religious sense of the Hebrews that the latter attained the ascendency over the decadent and immoral Canaanites. It embodies those early hopes and aspirations of which the days of David and Solomon were the historical basis. Vs. ³ voices the attitude toward the outside world that was dominant until the experiences of the exile opened the eyes of certain prophets to the idea of unselfish service. Cf. Gen. 25²⁸, Vol. I, § 28, for the brief Jacob-Esau birth oracle; Gen. 27^{27b-29}, Vol. I, § 30, for Isaac's blessing upon Jacob; Gen 27^{32b-39}, vol. I, § 56, for Jacob's blessing upon Ephraim and Manassch.

12³ The current translation, shall be blessed, is not supported by the Heb. nor the parallel passages. Cf Vol. I, § 12, note ⁴.

§ 10 To Jacob, the traditional father of the twelve tribes of Israel, the different oracles relating to them were appropriately attributed, just as to Isaac were assigned the Jacob-Esau oracles. This traditional ascription is embodied not only in the present early Judean prophetic setting, vs. ⁴, but also in the introduction to the oracle itself, ⁵. Thus the ovidence is strong that the tendency to attribute anonymous writings to certain prominent characters of a preceding age was vs. ', but also in the introduction to the order itself, '. If this did ordered is strong that the tendency of a stribute anonymous writings to certain prominent characters of a preceding age was very early, for the present poem in its completeness apparently antedates the division of the Hebrew Empire. It is, indeed, the national song of united Israel and may well come from a court poet in the days of David, who collected the earlier tribal songs and added the exordium and the exuberant description of the conquest and rule of Judah under the leadership of the great language. from Bethlehem. 8-12. After the division and the events which followed he would not, in all probability, have sung:

The scepter shall not pass from Judah, Nor the royal staff from between his feet.

Nowhere are these later calamities reflected. The tone of the peem is critical and the guilty tribes are condemned; but the spirit in general is jublant, and there is no ovidence that the poet wrote later than the middle of the reign of David or that of Solomo. This conclusion is also confirmed by the vocabulary and literary style which are primitive. The same is true of the institutions by the vocabulary and literary style which are primitive and religious ideas.

It is evident that many popular songs, some describing the situation, some the characteristics, and some the striking experiences of the different tribes have here been woven together. Soveral of them evidently, ϵ . q, those regarding Zobulun and Issachar, anticipate conditions antedating the union of the tribes or even the situation reflected in Judg. 5. Some contain allusions to incidents recorded in the traditions of Gen. ϵ . q., 34, and others to prohistoric events. In the suggestions which it furnishes regarding the earliest beginnings of Israel's life, the ancient poem is of great historical value.

With only a very few doubtful exceptions, the three-beat measure prevails throughout these poems. The ideas are simple and the literary style is crude but vigorous. They record the first beginnings of philosophical thinking. There are traces also of a diactor purpose: in the opening stansas, for example, the poet is seeking to formulate the principles illustrated by the bitter experience of the tribes

§ 1.1 This song is a later and widely variant version of the so-called blessing of Jacob in Gen. 49. Both refer to the geographical position, character, and experiences of the different tribes. The description of Joseph is in many lines verbally identical in both, showing that one poet was familiar with the work of the other. Di 33, however, is a more perfect unit, being provided with a noble and deeply religious prologue and epilogue. The style also is much more finished and the tone eulogistic. The conquest is only a distant memory of the past, 27. 22. The tribe of Simeon has disappeared entirely. Reuben is few in numbers and in danger of becoming extinct and the Levites have become an honored caste of priests. Judah, instead of ruling over all the tribes, as in Gen. 493-10, is apart by itself and in danger of being overwhelmed by its adversaries. Joseph, represented by the powerful tribes of Ephraum and Manssseh, is the object of the poet's pride.

armies of Assyria, in 736 s.c., brought disaster to the northern tribes. The days of Jeroboam I have been suggested as the background, but they were overshadowed by the act of disruption and the invasion of Shishak. The only entirely satisfactory setting is the middle of the prosperous reign of Jeroboam II. Victories over the Arameans and a strongly centralized government gave northern Israel, about the middle of the eighth century, its brilliant but brief Indian summer A poet in the court of Jeroboam II is probably the author of this majestic poem, which voices the popular hopes and national pride that are the background of Amos's stern prophecies. About 750 s.c. may with assurance be accepted as the date of the tribal oracles in ⁵⁻²; possibly the prologue, ¹⁻³, with its late words, may be an exilic or post-exilic addition. This is certainly true of the superscription, which probably came from the editor who introduced it into the book of Dt. and attributed the whole to the traditional author of this late prophetic book.

Except that both begin with Reuben, the order of the tribes in the two poems is essentially different: in Gen. 49 it is Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Zobulun, Issachar, Dan, Cad, Asher, Naphtali, Joseph, and Benjamur; in Dt. 33, Rouben, Judah, Lovi, Benjamin, Joseph, Zebulun, Issachar, Gad, Dan, Naphtali, and Asher.

Because of its setting and connection with David, the passage made a profound impression upon later psalm writers. Cf especially Pss 72, 89, 132.

§ 15 The elaborate prologue, the reference to David as the singer of the songs of Israel, 1, and the fulsome praise of David and of his rule in 3.4 indicate that this traditional oracle is not from David but rather from a much later period when traditions were beginning to magnify the personality of Israel's early king. DIRGES OVER THE FALLEN NATION

Of those reared in luxury

They who once fed on dainties are desolate in the streets: They who were reared upon purple embrace dunghills.

So the guilt of the daughter of my people was greater than Sodom's sin, For she has been overthrown as in a moment, without any hands being wrung for her.1

Of the nobles Her nobles were purer than snow, they were whiter than milk; Their skin was redder than coral, their beauty was as sapphire. Now their appearance is darker than blackness, they are not recognized on the streets.

Their skin cleaves to their bones, it is as dry as a stick.

Of the women

⁹More fortunate are those slain by the sword, than those slain by hunger, For these pine away, stricken through, for want of the fruits of the field. ¹⁰The hands of tender-hearted women have boiled their own children; They have become their food in the destruction of the daughter of my people.

Jehovah's appalling judgment

"Jehovah hath accomplished his work, he hath poured out his fury, He hath kindled a fire in Zion, and it hath burnt up her foundations. ¹²The kings of the earth believed not, nor the inhabitants of the world, ⁿ That the adversary and foe would enter into the gates of Jerusalem.

Gult and pollution of prophets and priests ¹⁸It is because of the sins of her prophets, the crimes of her priests, o Who have poured out in the midst of her the blood of the rightcous.

¹⁴They wander as blind men through the streets, they are polluted with blood, That men may not touch them they draw aside their garments:

15' Unclean!'p they cry to them, 'Depart, do not touch';

For they wander and go to and fro among the heathen, they no longer sojourn here.

¹⁶The anger of Jehovah hath scattered them, he will no more regard them, It respected not the persons of the priests, it favored not the prophets.

The problem uppermost in his mind is how Jehovah's favor may again be won He declares that it is only through the confession of the nation's ains and appealing to Jehovah's mercy that the nation can win this favor. Songs of Love and Marriage.—Cf, for general discussion, Introd, pp. 22-29.

§ 26 Later generations gave to this ps. a messianic interpretation, but it is an unmistakable example of a Hebrew court song. It was evidently written on the occasion of a royal marriage, and was probably sung by the court poet himself during the public festivities. In the first part of the poem the king is addressed, 2°, and his personal beauty and provess and the permanence and splendor of his rule are glowingly portrayed. Vs. § contains an alluson to the royal bride and is followed in the second half of the poem, 10-17, by an address to the queen in which her new duties, the splendor of her attire and of her train, and the hope that she may have noble offspring are naively but effectively set forth. The poem is introduced by an elaborate exordium, 1, which is doubtless typical of Hebrew court usage. Similar elaborate introductions are found at the beginning of the royal Balaam oracles in Nu. 24° and also in II Sam. 24°. The atmosphere of this ps. is evidently that of the joyous days before the Babylonian exile. Although this hymn may later have been regularly sung at royal marriages, there is little doubt that a definite theme and occasion were originally in the poet's mind. It is, of course, possible only conjecturally to identify the king addressed. As Briggs has pointed out [Pes. I, 334, 335), the conjecturally to identify the king addressed. The reference to vory palaces in § points also to the northern kingdom and to the days following Ahab, who, according to I Kgs 22°°, first reared such a structure. Amos also, in his denunciation of conditions in northern Israel, apparently alludes in 6°° to the singing of songs—probably similar to the present one—to the accompaniment of musical instruments. It is possible that this hy

Dialogue be-tween bride and her attendants

§ 27 For general discussion of the Sg. of Sgs, of. Introd, pp 22-29. The scene of this soliloquy and dialogue is evidently the home of the bride. It marks the beginning of the wedding festivities for which she is apparently preparing Surrounded by her girl finends, who, in keeping with the dramatic customs of the Oriental wedding, are called the daughters of Jerusalem, she throws aside the reserve which shuts the mouth of every unbetrothed maiden in the East and protests her love for her future husband. The scene corresponds very closely to the ante-nuptial parade songs recited by the bride and her attendants in the modern Palestiman wedding, as reported by Dalmann and already quoted. Cf. p. 25. Similarly in the next song the bindegroom himself is introduced. The chief difference between the biblical and the modern songs is that here, as throughout the Sg of Sgs, the author with rare effectiveness makes the bride the chief speaker. In these poems we have not mere stereotyped wedding refrains but genuine love-songs that recall the similar poems of Theoritius and of the east-Jordan poet Meleager, who wrote in classic Gk. Cf. Anthol. Palatina, V, 160. True, pure love breathes through them—the love that a betrothed bride should properly feel for her future husband. The purpose of these two opening songs, as the closing refrain in 3º possibly suggests, was to awaken such a love in the heart of the bride.

12 Certain interpreters would change the Heb in this line so as to make it a direct address

*12 Certain interpreters would change the Heb in this line so as to make it a direct address as in the second line. It is more natural, however, to interpret it as it is and to regard it as the poet's index that the lover is not present except in the heart of the brud She feels his presence, however, so strongly that her words naturally pass from the third to the second person in the suc-

b16 So Syr Possibly the Heb. represents the original, for it retains the third person as in 2s.

c15 Many interpreters assign all of this vs to the bride, but there is an unmistakable element of contrast which strongly suggests the second half of the first two lines were spoken by the daughters of Jerusalem, to whom the bride addresses her words. Her modesty as revealed throughout the book renders it exceedingly difficult to place the closing sentence in each of these lines upon her lps. Some commentators, recognizing the difficulty, revise the text in the second half of the second line so as to read Salama instead of Solomon.

416 This reference to her byothers is further illuminated by 5 and 86.

119 Heb., my. J110 Possibly the Heb is to be interpreted plaits (of hair). It describes that which was flattened. The next line, however, favors the reading spangles which perhaps corresponded to the coins which are worn across her forehead and hanging down on her checks by the modern Palestinian bands. *17 The exact interpretation of this and the following vs. is not clear. Certain interpreters regard it as secondary. The songs as a whole imply that the girl's lover was a shepherd. Her words are probably intended to express her passionate desire to be with him at all times.

*17 So Syr., Sym, and Lat. This reading is supported by the context. The traditional Heb reading, reiled, is due to the mistaken transposition of two letters. The meaning evidently is, Why should I be like a vagrant wanton, going from flock to flock in quest of my lover?

*18 It is not entirely clear who utters this vs. In the light of the immediately preceding context, however, it is probably the bride's attendants

§ 28 The sudden change of metre from the three to the five beat measure suggests that here a new song begins. The lover, who was apparently absent from the preceding dialogue, speaks, describing in characteristically Oriental yet reserved terms the beauty of his bride to be To-day the Arab poet can pay no higher tribute to the beauties of his wrife than to liken her to his stately the Arab poet can pay no higher tribute to the beauties of his wrife than to liken her to his stately steed. Vs. 11 introduces a corresponding three-line stanza in which the bride, in exquisitely delicate terms, responds by describing how precous to her is the love which she cherishes for her lover. The next stanza contains a beautiful dialogue abounding in concrete yet felicitous comparisons in which the bride protests that she is but a simple flower of the plains. Her lover with isons in which the bride protests that she is but a simple flower of the plains. Her lover with restraint—for he still addresses her as his friend rather than bride—but with marvellous felicity, declares that though she is but a simple peasant girl she is far more beautiful than her attendant friends and that she is well fitted to adorn the palace in which their shephord life is to be spert, for that palace is the greensward and the pillared forests. Each with rare aptress takes up and carries on the figure suggested by the other. In the concluding stanzas the bride develops the figure of the apple tree and, with reserve and delicacy, expresses her eagerness for the consumnation of their approaching marriage. The concluding vs contains the refrain three times repeated in the poem, cf. 35, 55, and addressed to her attendants. It is evidently intended to emphasize the importance of letting love grow spontaneously with that simplicity and freedom of which the gazelles and the fallow deer that leap over the plain are the fitting symbol.

Bridegroom's description of the bride's beauty

§ 30 The opening stanzas of this song introduce the bridegroom advancing with his attendants to claim his bride. In magination he is clad and attended with royal splendor. It is not clear who is speaking in the second stanza. It may possibly have been the bride, but more probably it was the people or some one of the wedding-guests who answered the question of the popular called the attention of the daughters of Jerusalem (the bride's attendants) to the approach of the bridegroom on this his wedding-day. The scene is evidently before the home of the bride and the hour is in the early evening, when the Oriental wedding festivities began.

The stanzas which follow represent the bridegroom's praise of his bride. It corresponds to the wast of the bridegroom in the modern Palestinian weddings. The description is characteristically concrete and typically Oriental. It begins with praise of her eyes and hair. A description of her bodily charms then follows. It was the one occasion when, in the social life of the East, such a description was deemed proper and appropriate. Its spirit, however, is chaste. It is followed by a highly poetic passage in which the bridegroom requests the bride to leave her home and become his wife. It is significant that, whereas in 4:-7 the bridegroom employs as earlier the more formal term friend in addressing the object of his affections, in and 10 he for the first time uses the term bride. The bride is described under the figure of a garden, even as in modern Arabic poetry. Using the same figure, and with great delicacy, the bride in 16 expresses her willingness to enter into the marriage relation. The song ends with an address to the assembled guests by the bridegroom. This corresponds to the refrain in which the bride addressed her attendants at the conclusion of the earlier songs. attendants at the conclusion of the earlier songs

Its object is evidently to indicate the intensity of the love which burns in her heart. Her description of her lover which follows is provoked by the question of her attendants. The bridegroom does not appear in person in this song until the close. As in the second song, 2²-3⁵, she is alone with her attendants in whose presence her frank expression of her love is appropriate. § 32 This song, chiefly devoted to a description of the charms of the bride, corresponds to the preceding description of the bridegroom. As in the third song, 3*-5*, the bridegroom advanced in regal state, so now the bride advances. She is first addressed by the bridegroom. The oponing stanza is largely a duplicate of the bridegroom's praise of the bride in 4*-5*. Possibly it is secondary, and the original song, like the corresponding one in 3*6-1*1, began with a question of the assembled guests. Here the bride evidently appears before the guests, clad in all briftiency, and possibly brandishing a sword, as in the corresponding scene in the modern east-Jordan wedding ceremony, and dances, while they chant her charms. It is significant that the remarkably free description of her physical beauty in 7*-5* begins with her feet and concludes with a reference to her tresses, in which the king, z. s., the bridegroom, is held captive. The brief dialogue between the bridegroom and bride at the end apparently concludes the public wedding ceremony.

St Tirzah, for a brief time after the death of Solomon, the capital of northern Israel, is probably to be identified with the modern Texasir, twelve miles northeast of Samaria. It stood on a commanding height in the midst of fertile fields.

§ 33 This song marks the consummation of the wedding ceremony, the conducting of the bride to the home of her future husband. The poet, with consummate dramatic art, has objectified and interpreted this concluding act by means of a dialogue between the bride and the bridegroom. As in 33 and 64, it is introduced by a question raised by the people. The powerful description of true marital love in 4.7 was apparently the marriage oath uttered by the bride as she entered the home of her husband. In protesting that she possesses that purity which essential to a faithful marriage, she quotes an earlier conversation between her brothers. In conclusion she declares that she is well content with humble life, though it is in striking contrast to the splendor of Solomon which had furnished the imagery for the marriage ceremones.

The Kingly Psalms of the Psalter.—The first group of kingly pss consists of prayers or litanies apparently uttered when the king or ruler to which each refers was still living. They are without reasonable doubt the oldest group of pss. in the Psalter Inasmuch as the king is the chief representative of the nation, the psalmists have incorporated in these pss. the noblest patrotic hopes of their age. In this group the national and material hopes which are frankly expressed, for example, in the early Balaam oracles, Nu. 237-10, 18-24, 24¹⁻³, 19-19, are combined with the nobler ethical ideals so clearly set forth by the great prophets of the eighth and seventh centuries B. C. Progress toward a more ethical and spintual kingly ideal is clearly discernible when the pss are arranged in their chronological order.

§ 34 The aspirations expressed in this ps. are closely related to those found in the Balaam oracles. It is full of youthful vigor and energy. It is apparently a litany, chanted by the priestly singers in the temple courts while an offering was being presented by the king. The one addressed in the opening stanza is the king, who was probably present, surrounded by his warriors. Three reasons are urged why Jehovah should give deliverance and victory: the first is his character and unique relation to the people in behalf of whose king the prayer is uttered; the second is the rich sacrifice, including both cereal and whole burnt offerings, which the king had probably caused to be presented to his divine Lord while this litany was being sung, the third is the vow of the priestly singers that if Jehovah will grant deliverance they will repay him with the gift of song and praise. It is the naïve, childish conception of Jehovah and of religion which here confronts us. The confident loyousness of the pre-exilic period is everywhere in evidence. The absence of the detailed references to persons, found, e g, in the song of Deborah and in David's lament over Saul and Jonathan, indicates that the litany was probably wri

*208 Gk. Heb. adds Jehovah.

*209 Gk and Lat, answer us.

*209 Lit, on the day of our calling.

*35 In structure and thought this ps is closely related to 20. Its second vs. is an echo of 204. The same king evidently originally figured in both. The one ps. is perhaps a litany to be sung before battle and the other a Te Deum to be sung after the victory had been won. The allusions, however, in 21 are not to a definite event but are general. Not merely victory in war but the conferring of the blessings which every Heb king desired are described in the opening stanza. The warlike note is much stronger in the second main stanza where the king is directly addressed, even as in the first stanza of 20. The ps, presents a noble though warlike kingly ideal. It is the portrait not of a tyrant but of a king who, true to the Hebrew ideal, ruled as the viceory of Jehovah and the servant of the people. The ps consists of two stanzas of twelve lines each followed by a refrain of two lines which was probably sung by the people in unison

1211 Possibly thus should (with Briggs, Pss., I, 183), here and throughout the ps., be translated victory.

§ 36 Vs 2 of this ps. suggests that the author was an exile; but the declaration that he will call upon Jehovah even from the ends of the earth may be but a superlative expression of his confidence that Jehovah is able to help him wherever he is. The figures of the rock, of the strong tower, and of being Jehovah's guest in his tent point to the earlier and simpler days rather than to the later. In Ps 23 the psalmist looks forward to dwelling in Jehovah's temple rather than in his tent, as here. The vow was also a prominent pre-exilic institution. The reference to the king in *3 is alone satisfied by a pre-exilic setting, for he is a Hebrew ruler. Vs. implies that it was a collective ps. It was a prayer equally fitting for the individual or the community, although the reference to the king emphasized its public character. In the light of all the facts, it may, with 20 and 21, be assigned to a pre-exilic date The days of Jeremiah and Josah furnish a fitting background. ^{§ 37} At least a century of remarkable moral and religious development apparently less between this ps. and 20 and 21. Here the ideals of Am., Hos., and Is are woven into a majestic royal ode. Like the laws in Dt. 17¹⁴⁻²⁹, which define the duties of a Heb. ruler to his subjects, this ps. was evidently written in order to place before the king worthy ideals to guide him in his rule. It recalls the poem of the Egyptian prophet Ipiuwer, who lived not long after 2000 s.c. After describing the overthrow of existing political and social evils, this Egyptian forerunner of the Heb. prophets declared that a just king would arise who would smite ent when the rauses has arm against it. Josiah was the only king in Judah's later history who, even in part, realized the social ideals set forth in this wonderful ps. Of him Jeremish declared, He executed law and justice; he judged the cause of the poor and needy (Jer. 22¹⁹.). Evidently Josiah's being policy was in the mind of the psalmist. The description in 12-14 fits no other Heb ruler so well—not even David. Ps. 72 is the poetic counterpart of the book of Dt., which comes from the same period. The poetry in 8-11 is the antithesis of that of the Prince of Peace pictured in the remainder of the ps. It voices Israel's narrow national prejudices and selfish ambitions. The immediate sequel of 1-7 is 12-13. It he light of these facts it is possible that 8-11 came from the hands of a later editor who missed the promise of world-wide dominion which is found in the primitive Balaam oracle and which seemed to him more important than the visions of justice and mercy that were to mark the rule of Jehovah's king Jehovah's king

§ 38 As Briggs has shown (Pes., II, 250-254), Ps. 82 consists of two and possibly three originally independent poems. This is evinced by the different metre employed and by the dissimilar themes treated in different parts of the ps. The older ps, written in the three-beat measure, based on the traditional covenant with David recorded in II Sam. 78-19, and emphasizing the contrast between the promise and the fate of the reigning house of Judah, is clearly the older literary unit. In theme and style it is closely parallel to the older poems in the book of Lam. The description in 18-16 implies that the psalms: twas personally acquainted with the king whose fate he bewailed. It describes well either Jehoiachin or Zedekiah. Vs. 45 perhaps fits best the ill-fated

The later editor, in the process of reconstruction, evidently transferred *. from their original position after *\frac{1}{2}$ and injected them into the midst of a later poem written in the four-beat measure describing Jehovah's might and goodness. This wonderfully symmetrical and powerful song of adoration is found in 1. 2. $\frac{1}{2}$. Cf. § 94. § 39 This ps, like 1, has no superscription. It was clearly given its present position as an introduction to the collection of Davidic pss which follows in 3-41. Its basis is the covenant and promise made to David according to II Sam 711-16. In 7 the psalmist puts in the mouth of the king the promise of II Sam 741s, I will be to him a father, and he shall be to me a son. The poet assumes as his historical background the period after. David had established his dynasty at Jerusalem and had subjugated the surrounding nations. It is apparently in David's mouth, as the representative of Israel's reigning house, that the poet puts the words in 7-9, which embody his messiance hopes. These contemplate the world-wide rule of the messianic king. The great kingdoms of Assyna, Babylonia, and Persia, and the repeated rebellions of the subject peoples, are evidently before the psalmist's mind. To him the splendors and glory, which the Chronicler projected back into the days of David and Solomon, lie in the future. Not the sword but Jehovah's might is to bring about this consummation.

projected back into the days of David and Solomon, lie in the future. Not the sword but Jehovah's might is to bring about this consummation.

The ps apparently reflects the broadened vision that came with the experiences of the exile, but it is difficult to date it with assurance. Except for the presence of several Aram words, the language is free from indications of late influence. Israel's outlook is hopeful. On the distant horison are great national rebellions. The opening days of the reign of Danus, when every messenger brought reports of a new rebellion and when, as we learn from the sermons of Haggai and Zechariah, cf. Hag 22-2, Zech 2, the Jews hoped that a Davidic king would speedily arise in their midst and set up a world-wide kingdom, furnish the most satisfactory setting. This is also in harmony with its position at the head of the earliest Davidic collection of pss. Cf. Introd, p. 45.

The ps. is remarkably symmetrical and falls into four stanzas of approximately seven lines each. The strophic parallelism is most marked: the first and fourth are synonymous and stand in the antithetic relation to the second and third, which are synonymous.

The hopes of the ps. never found their complete realization in Israel's history; but the absolute trust in Jehovah and in the ultimate victory of the right that pervades it lifts it above all local conditions and gives it a universal significance which finds its true realization in the kingdom

^{§ 40} This vigorous, stately, highly poetic ps breathes the warlike spirit of the Maccabean era. Evidently the tide of battle has turned in favor of the Jews, and they are already reponing in the attainment of political independence. Although brief, it is full of allusions to Israel's earlier hopes and conditions. The figure in 'is based on the late Jewish tradition in Gen. 14. According to I Mac. 144, Simon and his descendants were assured the high-pnesthood forevr. Like the ancient priest-king of Gen. 14, he combined both civil and religious authority. The initial letters of 15, 2, 3, and 4 spell the name Simon, the last of the sons of Mattathias, whose achievements and regard as suggested in this ns correspond closely to the detailed record of I Mac. There and reign, as suggested in this ps., correspond closely to the detailed record of I Mac There is little doubt, therefore, that this is a Maccabean ps. It may be dated with assurance in the year 141 s c., when Simon was proclaimed high priest, general, and governor of the Jews and the priests, and protector of all. I Mac 14^{cr}

11321 The reference is probably to the misfortunes attendant upon David's first attempt to remove the ark to Jerusalem Cf. II Sam. 61-11.

m 1323 No such oath is recorded elsewhere in the OT. It is either an inference from the historical situation or an element taken from later Jewish tradition.

From this context it appears that it included the region southwest of Jerusalem in which Kirjathjearin, where the ark has been left, according to I Sam 71, was situated.

1327 The historical narrative is here condensed This vis describes the resolve of the people. 1328 An echo of the ancient song that, according to Nu 104, was sung in the wilderness whenever the people took up the ark and began the march. It is probably quoted from II Chr. 641.

^{*1107} An exceedingly difficult vs. Heb reads, He drinks of the brook on the way; therefore he lifts up his head. The above translation follows a reconstruction suggested by Briggs (Pss., II, 379) § 41 Like Ps. 89, this ps is based on the covenant with David recorded in II Sam 711-16. The psalmist is, however, familiar with the writings of the Chronicler, II Chr. 60-43, and with a late Jewish tradition regarding the removal of the ark to Jerusalem in the days of David He also uses the terms and is imbued with the ideas of the late prestly school Cf. 9.12 The prous ones mentioned in 8.18 are probably the Headcars who relibed shout Index Macachesis. The literary Jewish tradition regarding the removal of the ark to Jerusalem in the days of David He also uses the terms and is imbued with the daes of the late prestly school Cf 9. 12 The prous ones mentioned in 9. 14 are probably the Hasideans who rallied about Judas Maccabeus The literary style of the ps. is awkward and repetitious and lacks the vigor of the earlier periods. It probably comes from the Maccabean period and voices the hope that Jehovah will redeem his promises to Jerusalem and the house of David through the achievements of the Hasmonean rulers. The lamp for Jehovah's anointed (David), 17, was probably Simon, who revived the traditions and glories of the Davidic dynasty. It is significant that in the closing stanza the psalmist puts the chief emphasis on the restoration of Jerusalem.

JEHOVAH'S PROMISES TO DAVID AND TO ZION

¹⁷There will I make the horn of David bud; I have arranged a lamp of for mine anointed.

¹⁸His enemies will I clothe with shame; but upon him his crown will bloom.'

There is every reason to believe that this ps voices the ideals of Simon, who out of gratitude was made by his Jewish subjects their governor, military commander, and high priest. Of all the Maccabean rulers he was the most famous for the justice and faith which he showed to his nation, and because he sought by all means to exalt his people. . . so that the heathen were taken away from their country, as well as those who were in the city of David (I Mac. 1455. ). h101s Lit, to mornings. The Heb. idiom, to rise early in the morning, was equivalent to our Eng verb, to be zealous. The present idiom expresses the idea of being constantly zealous. The Rule of Jehovah the Divine King.—A phase of the messianic hope very different from that expressed in the preceding sections is developed in the present group of pss. The Davidic king has disappeared completely from the psalmist's vision and instead Jehovah is the divine King, who rules supreme not only over little Israel but over all nations and the universe. These pss. represent in many ways the noblest and most spiritual expression of Israel's messianic hope. In the light of the prophetic writings, it is possible to trace the gradual unfolding of this belief. Like the Davidic national hopes, its genesis may be traced back to the days of the united Heb. kingdom. The example of one king ruling over all the tribes of Israel and their conquered neighbors suggested the analogy of one divine King ruling supreme over Jew and Gentile alike. The prophet Amos was the first to express the definite conviction that Jehovah directed the fortunes of Israel's heathen neighbors as well as those of his chosen people. Acquaintance with the Assyr, Baby., and Persian empires, each ruled by one absolute monarch whose authority extended almost to Jehovah's rule. The exile also brought them into touch with many foreign peoples and developed within the hearts of certain enlightened Jews the desire to share with other peoples the worship of the one God who had specially revealed himself to the Jewish people.

ship of the one God who had specially revealed himself to the Jewish people.

Zechariah, whose date, early in the Persian period, can be absolutely fixed, is the first prophet Decoration, whose caste, early in the Fersian period, can be absolutely fixed, is the first prophet to express definitely this missionary hope. In those days ten men out of all the languages of the rations shall take hold of the skirt of him who is a Jew, saying: We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you. In 18 557 the noble hope is also expressed that Jehovah's house shall be called the house of prayer for all people. The unknown prophet of Zech 144, who wrote during the latter part of the Gk period or during the Maccabean age, also clearly declared, Jehovah shall be king all over the earth

all over the earth
In these pss, which describe Jehovah's kingly rule, the liturgical element is prominent. The authors of most of them were well acquainted with the later O T writings. Ezek, II Is, Gen., Job, and many of the earlier pss The influence of II Isaiah is especially strong. These pss represent the high-water mark of Israel's messiance hopes. Their ideals are broader, less national, and more universal than those found elsewhere in the Psalter. They probably reflect the larger outlook of the Jews of the dispersion, and may well have been written to be sung by the pilgrims as they came streaming from the distant lands of the exiles to pay homage to the divine King at the great annual feast in the days following the restoration of the Judean community as a result of Nehemiah's work. They formulate that exited belief in the rule or kingdom of God which was given the central place in the teachings of Jesus. Spiritualized, ethicized, individualized, and yet universalized by him, this conception of Jehovah's rule became the corner-stone of Christianity

Jehovah into his temple. There is unquestionably a certain literary unity in the ps., whether it be original or the work of the editor, for throughout Jehovah is the object of homage, and the theme is the going up of the people to the temple to worship. The date of the concluding section, 7-10, is the crux of the whole question. Its background is evidently an important event in the history of the temple. Three such events have been advocated by different interpreters: (1) the dedication of Solomon's temple; (2) the rededication of the second temple in 516, and (3) the reconsecration of the temple in 165 s. The martial note favors either the earliest or the latest date, but the position of the ps. in the Psalter does not favor the Maccabean period although it does not entirely preclude it. The reference to the everlasting doors, lit, doors of eternty, is inconsistent with the original dedication of the temple, if the allusion is to the gates of the temple itself. That the author or at least the editor of the ps. s. a.  Furthermore, there is no superstion in inconsistent with the original dedication of the temple, if the allusion is to the gates of the temple gates is clearly shown by the first part of the ps in its present form had in mind the temple gates is clearly shown by the first part of the ps in its present form had in mind the temple gates is clearly shown by the first part of the ps , e.g., *. Furthermore, there is no suggestion in the ps. that the author had in mind the gates of Jerusalem. The peculiar phrase, King of Glory, recalls the similar titles which the Baby. kings employed in their public decrees and historical inscriptions. Jehovah's entrance into his temple implies that, according to the belief of his worshippers, he had for a time abandoned it. From Ezek, and elsewhere in the contemporary literature we learn that this was precisely what was popularly believed by the Jews during the period of the Baby, exile Ezekiel taught that Jehovah had temporarily taken up his abode on a distant mountain in the north. The problem that disturbed the temple builders to whom Zechariah spoke was whether or not Jehovah would be satisfied with the temple and its service, polluted as they had been by the presence of the heathen Cf. Zech 31-4. The second half of this ps., therefore, is peculiarly appropriate in connection with the rededication of the second temple. It implies that the people marched in solemn procession to the temple very much as they did at the dedication of the walls a few years later. Cf. Neh. 123-4. Equally appropriate is the opening stanze of Ps. 24, which describes the universality of Jehovah's rule—an idea which appears in germinal form in Am 9 and was characteristic of the prophets of the earlier part of the Persian period. The qualifications of a true worshipper of Jehovah's rule—an idea which appears in germinal form in Am 9 and was characteristic of the prophets of the earlier part of the Persian period. p9510 So Gk., Lat, and Syr. $47 Pss 96 and 98 are introduced by the same striking formula and are closely related in spirit and theme. It is possible that they were originally one ps., for 98 develops the thought of 96. The fact that Ps 96 is quoted in I Chr. 162-3 suggests, although it does not conclusively prove, that it comes from the Gk. period 996 I e. are nothing and do nothing for their worshippers. The idea is a familiar one in the post-exilic writers. Cf. Lev. 194. 261, and Ps. 977. 196 Lit., plendor, as in 5. The reference is to the garments and ornaments to be worn by the worshippers. These must be suited to the worship of the divine King. 1966 Lit., *whirl, i e., in the dance. 19710 So the VSS. The Heb. is clearly due to a verbal error.
$51 This brief ps. was evidently added to the ps which preceded it, 221-25, to adapt it to liturgical uses. The connection with the preceding, however, is very loose. The metre is the five-beat rather than the three-beat measure. The theme and spirit are also fundamentally different. Here Israel's missionary hope is clearly expressed. All nations, both the weak and the strong, are soon to come and worship Jehovah.
It is difficult to fix definitely the date of this ps. Its liturgical character, its relation to the preceding ps, which is in itself late, and the wide hope here expressed, all suggest that it is one of the latest pss in the Psalter. The later Gk or Maccabean period furnishes the most natural historical background.

Jehovah's judgment upon wicked

Psalms of Thanksgiving.—The distinction between the pss of praise and thanksgiving and those of adoration and trust is not always clearly drawn. Although they are closely related, there is, however, a fundamental difference. The pss, of adoration voice the feelings of the psalms as as they contemplated the gracious character of Jehovah, revealed in the life of the nation, in nature, and in his care for mankind; while the pss. of praise and thanksgiving express the gratitude which the individual or nation felt for definite services performed by Jehovah in their behalf. In the pss. of praise and thanksgiving some national deliverance or signal experience is usually in the mind of the psalmist, or else they were written for liturgical use. As a rule, therefore, these pss are more national and less individualistic than the pss of adoration. The Hebrews conceived of thanksgiving as a form of offering pleasing to Jehovah. It is often compared with sacrifice and other concrete forms of expressing allegiance to their divine King. The pleasure which Jehovah was thought to take in praise is suggested by Ps. 30°:

What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the pit? Can the dust praise thee, and make known thy faithfulness?

Can the dust praces thee, and make known thy faithfulness?

No one can question that there is an ultimate truth in this naïve, primitive conception. The infinite God does not depend for his joy upon the gratitude of mankind; but, from all analoges between the human and divine Father, there is reason to believe that he delights in the sincere thanks of his children and, above all, in that development in their character which comes from the spontaneous and joyous expression of the innate and yet divine impulse of gratitude.

§ 52 This ps. bears the title, For the chief musician. To be sung by male soprano voices (tollowing a revised text). Psalm of David Originally Pss. 9 and 10 constituted one alphabetical ps. Ps. 10 has no superscription in the Heb, and the two pss. are joined in Ck. texts. They were evidently divided for liturgical purposes. Only half the alphabetical strophes can now be clearly distinguished. The metre also frequently changes from the three to the four-beat measure, indicating that the original poem has been recast, especially in vss. 7-10, 10-11, by a later editor. Many attempts have been made to recover the original acrostic ps., but the resulting text is only conjectural. The logical connection of thought does not always follow the alphabetical strophic division, so that in the above analysis the acrostic structure has been ignored.

The artificial structure of the ps points to a post-exilic date. The wicked in the community are arrogantly persecuting the afflicted righteous, 10°, and are uttering their sceptical taunts, as in the book of Mal. 31-15. Cf. 10-4. Jehovah is enthroned in his temple in Mount Zion Evidently the background of this ps, like most of those in the first Davidic collection, is the discouraging days just before the appearance of Nehemah.

Jer 2515, 4912, Lam. 421, Ezek 2323. 43 and Is 5117. Arrogant, malicious foes use prominently on the psalmist's horizon. The wicked are lifting up their horns, that is, attacking the people of Jehovah. Possibly the ps comes from the period just before Nehemiah, but its apocalyptic style and the hope expressed in the concluding line, that the horns of the righteous will be lifted up, point to the earlier years of the Maccabean struggle.

Ps 577-11 is repeated in 1081-5, indicating that it was once an independent unit. The refrain in 11 is repeated in 5 and probably originally stood both at the beginning and end of the second poem. In this respect the ps resembles 8, which has the same refrain at the beginning and end. The broad outlook, the happy, trustful spirit, and an atmosphere like that of the II is indicate that this brief poem was probably written during the latter part of the Persian period, when the Jewish community experienced the results of Nehemiah's

They preserve the metrical structure followed in the rest of the ps and constitute a fitting conclusion. The epilogue in 4 is modelled after the similar epilogue in Hos. 140 and is intended as an index hand to call attention to the fundamental teachings embodied in the ps. The original ps was inspired by the contemplation of II Is and by the experiences of the generation to which the psalmist belonged. Again the vision changes and he shares the trials and the perils of the sallors helplessly tossed by the storm If not written in one of the lands of the dispersion this ps is certainly from one who had travelled widely and observed closely and himself participated in the life that lay beyond the bounds of Palestine There is no suggestion of the stress and struggle of the Maccabean period. The ps. comes rather from the Gk period, when the life and thought of the Jews of the dispersion were even more important than those of Palestinian Judaism 1007 This vs is unmetrical and loosely connected with the context. Ps. 33 'Rejoice in Jehovah and exult, O ve righteous; And shout for joy all ye upright in heart, Praise is becoming to the upright. ²Praise Jehovah with the lyre, Sing unto him with a harp of ten strings, Sing unto him a new song, Play skilfully with a loud shout. By Jehovah's command the heavens were made. And by the breath of his mouth all their host. He gathereth in a heap the waters of the sea, Layeth up in treasuries the great deep. *Let all the earth be in fear of Jehovah, Let every dweller on earth stand in awe of him; For he it was who spake and it came to pass, He, it is, who commanded and it stood forth.

133 This ps. apparently began with the last vs of the preceding ps. The first line of 33 in the Heb, shout aloud ye righteous in Jehovah, is apparently due to a mistake of the scribe, who repeated elements from the two preceding lines.

^{$ 59} This is an orphan ps. Only in the Gk. does it have the superscription, To David, which characterizes the earlier collection of hymns. The contents of this ps. confirm the implication of the lacking superscription that it is a late insertion into the early Davidic Psalter. Vs. 7 echoes Jb. 33²⁵, vs. 9, Gen. 13. 15, Zech. 12. Vs. 15 finds its best historical illustration in I Mac. 315. Vss. 15, 115.12 also point to a Maccabean background. Signal victories over well-equipped foes are still fresh in the poet's mind. The consciousness of constant peril has left an indelble stamp upon the ps. Its logic, however, is clear and its faith unwavering. It was well calculated to appeal both to the reason and the feeling of the valuant but sorely beset Jews who rallied about Judas Maccabeau.

The analysis is difficult because the necessity of beginning each alternating line with the succeeding letter of the Heb. alphabet made it impossible for the poet to express himself freely. Lake many of the acrostic, liturgical pss, it consists of a series of pious ejaculations taken from earlier pss or based on Israel's national experiences. Jehovah a refuge in the hour of mortal heed

Ps. 18 ²Jehovah³ is my rock and my fortress. My deliverer, b my stronghold in which I seek refuge; My shield, and the horn of my salvation, my high tower, My saviour, who delivereth me from violence.º

Who giveth deliverance to his king, And doeth kindness to his anointed, To David and his seed forever.

To Dand and his seed forever.

Possibly, under the influence of the interpretation suggested by this superscription and postscript the ps was placed in the mouth of David and included in the appendix to II Sam. In its present position in II Sam 22 it separates the extracts from the older records of David's reign found in 21 and 24. The variations between the two versions of the ps are many and significant. On the whole, the version in II Sam 22 is the better preserved. Whether the ps. was placed in II Sam as the result of the testimony of the superscription at the beginning of Ps. 18 or not is uncertain; but, like the other traditions of Davidic authorship appended to pss, it is evidently much later than the ps itself, which contains no strong evidence in favor of and much against its Davidic authorship. While there is a certain ideal or messianic element running through the ps, there are many indications that it is not individual but national. The keynote of the ps is struck in ". For thou dost saws an afflicted people. The elaborate theophany described in *-15 is natural if in behalf of a nation but not of an individual. The foes described are not individuals, but nations. Cf. especially . "-. Throughout the ps, the allusions are to general not to specific events. It is a song of praise and adoration for Jehovah's signal deliverances of his people. It contains many echoes of II Is. and Dt. 32. The late prestly conception of righteousness is presented in ***.

To David, the servant of Jehovah, who spoke to Jehovah the words of this song in the day that Jehovah delivered him from the hand of his enemies and from the hand of Saul. And he said, I love thee, Jehovah, my strength. The ps itself is written entirely in the first person singular; but a later hand, possibly the same that wrote the superscription, has added a postscript in the third person:

The breakersd of death encompassed me, And the floods of impiety made me afraid. ⁵The cords of Sheol came around me. The snares of death confronted me. In my distress I called upon Jehovah. And cried for help to my God; From his temple he heard my voice. My cry for help came to his ears.

⁷The earth shook and quaked. And the foundations of the heavensg trembled. They tottered because he was wroth. ⁸Smoke went up out of his nostrils, h And fire from his mouth devoured. Coals flamed forth from him. Then he bowed the heavens and came down. Thick darkness was under his feet: ¹⁰And he rode upon a cherub and flew. Yea, he swooped down upon the wings of the wind. "Darkness he placed round about him," His covering was the massk of the waters. His advent to deliver

The reflective, didactic note of the wisdom teachers appears in 5-27. The presence of certain Aramaic words also point to a comparatively late period. The deliverance in 4-5 may have been suggested by the work of Nehemiah in protecting the Judean community from its foes. The victorious, warlike note in 3-40 points to the early Maccabean period. The ps. may possibly come from the latter part of the Persian period, but on the whole it fits better in the days following the great victories of Judas, in 165 B.C. It was probably added to the first collection of Davidic pss., even after the early canon of the Psatter was complete, because it had already found a place in II Sam and was by common consent attributed to David. While it contains many strong figures it leads the consingity and apontancity of the earlier and less elaborate pss.

JEHOVAH'S SWAY OVER MEN

§ 67. Jehovah's Just and Omnipotent Sway over Men and Nature, Ps. 68

Ps. 68 When Jehovahu ariseth his enemies are scattered. And those who hate him flee before him. ²As smoke is driven away when the wind driveth it. As wax doth melt before the fire, So the wicked perish before Jehovah. But the righteous are glad, they exult. Before Jehovah they rejoice with gladness.

Jehovah, the invincible warnor

Sing to Jehovah, make melody to his name. Extol him who rideth on the clouds:" Bless his name and exult before him. ⁵Father of the fatherless, and defender of widows. Jehovah is in his holy habitation: ⁶Jehovah bringeth home the solitary,⁹ He leadeth forth those bound with chains." But the rebellious dwell in a parched land.

Yon Sinaib before Jehovah, Israel's God. ⁹Thou didst send down, O Jehovah, a plentiful rain, Thou didst strengthen thine inheritance when it was wearv:

Controller of the forces of nature in behalf of his people

§ 67 Evidently the background of this ps is a great victory. It was so signal and complete that it recalled the other great victory won by the Hebrews on the plain of Esdraelon under the leadership of Deborah and Barak. The poet constantly weaves into this ps. figures and lines derived from the ancient poem describing that event, Judg 5. Now he has in mind the defeat not of the king Sisera but of the royal leaders of several armies who have been put to flight, leaving their rich, scattered spoil behind them, ¹²⁻¹⁴. The warlike, exultant spirit is clearly that of the Maccabean era. Cf. ²⁰⁻²⁵. The many citations from older Heb poems, and especially II is, also point to a late date. The vivid picture of the processions of singers and musicians and the assembled people in ²⁴⁻²⁵ is a counterpart of the description of the reconsecration of the temple by Judas and his followers in 165 B c, when they had won their marvellous victories over the Syrian armies. I Mac 4³⁴⁵⁻²⁶ states that the temple was dedicated again with songs and harps and lutes and with cymbals. And all the people prostrated themselves and worshipped and gave praise to Heaven, who had given them good success. And they celebrated the dedication of the altar eight days and offered burnt offerings with gladness and sacrificed a sacrifice of deliverance and praise. This ps has been assigned to almost every period from Joshua to John Hyrcanus, but in the momentous year of 165 B c it finds its only altogether satisfactory setting. It richly supplements our knowledge of that crisis, for it reveals the feelings of the victorious Jews Like the contemporary visions of Dan 7-12, its language is highly figurative and at times almost florid, but it is full of poetic fire. Cf. ¹³⁻¹⁵. The rebellious in ¹⁻¹⁶ are probably the appostate Jews.

Jehovah's victory over Judah's foes alone is worthy œ٤ men's homage ¹⁰Surely the wrath of manⁱ praiseth thee, The residue of wrath keepeth festival to thee.

¹¹Pay vows to Jehovah, your God,

To the terrible One let all round about him bring gifts.

¹²He taketh away¹ the spirit of princes, He is terrible to the kings of the earth.

^{§ 68} Here we feel the warlake, exultant Maccabean spirit. The ps. was evidently written after a signal victory It may well have been the defeat of the boastful Syrians under the three generals on the plain near Emmaus, recorded in I Mac. 41-27 The afficied in 9 describes the persecuted Jews in the early stages of the Maccabean struggle. The text of this ps. has suffered greatly, but scribal errors have not wholly obscured its bold vigor and hopefulness.

*76° A late designation of Jerusalem. Cf. Gen 141°,

*76° This line is evidently corrupt, as the variant readings and the lack of consistency with the context indicate. The Heb. must be corrected with the aid of Targ, which reads, fearful for glorious. Cf. 1. 12, where the same title is used. Excellent, added in the Heb, is probably due to a scribe who was trying to make the meaning clear

*76° Gk., everlasting mountains. This reading may be original but the Heb. is consistent with the picture of Jehovah as a lion defying and shattering the weapons of Israel's foes and leaping upon the sleeping hosts, even as Judas, descending from the mountains, attacked the unsuspecting Syrians in the early morning, I Mac. 41-47.

*76° I. e., had no time to make armed resistance before they were overpowered by the fierce warriors of Judas.

warriors of Judas.

warrors of Judas.

1767 Restoring the corrupt Heb text
17610 The meaning of this vs is not clear Wrath of men may mean wrath against men,
1. e., the feeling of indignation which the Jews felt toward their foes. The traditional Heb. text of the second line makes little sense, shalt thou gird upon thee. A slight change gives the above.

17611 Jehovah may be a scribal addition.

17622 So Gk. and Lat. Heb., cut off, i. e., courage.

JEHOVAH'S MIGHTY DELIVERANCE

§ 69. Jehovah's Mighty Deliverance, Ps. 124

Ps. 124 If it had not been Jehovah who was ours, let Israel now say. 2If it had not been Jehovah who was ours, when men rose up against us: ³Then they had swallowed us alive, when their wrath was kindled against us, ⁴Then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our souls.^m

Thanksgiving to Jehovah for escape

§ 70. Thanksgiving for a Return of Prosperity, Ps. 126

Ps. 126 When Jehovah restoreth prosperity to Zion, We are like those who have been dreaming. ²Then is our mouth filled with laughter, And our tongue with singing; Then they say among the nations: 'Jehovah hath done great things for them.' ³Heⁿ hath done great things for us: we are glad.

Ps. 118 Oh give thanks unto Jehovah, for he is good; For his kindness endureth forever.

Call to all to praise Jeho-m 1244 A scribe has repeated the preceding line. § 70 In this ps. we hear the laughter and songs of the Jews, when the victories of Judas turned the tide of prospenty toward Zion and when all the heathen world recognized that their God had verily done great things for his people The second stanza indicates that, as during the early years of the Maccabean era, the crisis had not entirely passed.

1263 Heb. repeats Jehouch.

o 1264 I. e., where the land is parched and in need of water. § 71 This is one of the most majestic of all the liturgical pss. Its unity has been questioned 1 Ints is one of the most majestic of all the literactal pss. Its unity has been questioned and many able commentators have been inclined to interpret the recurring refrains as evidence of alternating strophe and antistrophe in the mouth of a soloist and a chorus or two distinct choruses. That this is true of the processional that begins with "e cannot be doubted. The literary structure of the first part, however, appears to be simpler. Vas. 1-4 are a call to praise Jehovah. First the entire nation, then the priests, and last of all the assembled worshippers are exhorted to join in the hymn of praise and trumph which follows, *-1.5. The spokesman in 1-4 may be the high priest or more probably the director of the temple singers. THANKSGIVING FOR NATIONAL DELIVERANCES

²Let the house of p Israel say: 'His kindness endureth forever.' 3Let the house of Aaron now say: 'His kindness endureth forever.' Let those who fear Jehovah say: 'His kindness endureth forever.'

Jehovah's ability and readmess to deliver

Out of my distress I called upon Jehovah; Jehovah answered meq in a large place. ⁶Jehovah is for me; I fear not. What is there that men can do to me?" 7Jehovah is for me among those who help me,5 I, therefore, face those who hate me. ⁸It is better to take refuge in Jehovah Than it is to put faith in man. It is better to take refuge in Jehovah Than it is to put faith in princes.

His help against attacking foes ¹⁰All nations encompassed me about; In the name of Jehovah I will circumciset them. in 19 the worshippers outside the temple gates address the Levites or the priests, who reply in each succeeding couplet The assembled worshippers speak collectively, as in the first part of the ps, while the priests or Levites address them in the plural In conclusion, 29, all join in the refrain.

while the priests or Levites address them in the plural In conclusion, 20, all join in the refrain. This martial ps is the later counterpart of the triumphal odes of which the so-called song of Deborah in Judg. 5 is a classic example. It possibly embodies passages drawn from older war-songs. Vss. 10-13 clearly reflects the warlike spirit of the Maccabean age. It abounds in vivid references to the details of the Maccabean struggle, e. g., All nations encompass me about. In their disastrous negotiations with such perfidious kings as Antiochus Epiphanes they had learned the lesson that it is better to take refuge in Jehovah than to put faith in princes, 2. Evidently the ps was written after a signal victory. Cf. 5. This was in all probability Judas's victory over Nicanor, and this ps may well have been written to be sung in celebrating Nicanor's day. According to I Mac. 743, 46, the people rejoiced greatly and kept that day as a day of great gladness. They also enacted an ordinance for the yearly celebration of this day, the thirteenth day of Adar. This ps voices the spontaneous outburst that resulted from the relaxation of the tension of the early Maccabean struggle It contains quotations from many earlier pss. The large lurgical element indicates that it is intended to be used in a public service. It is exceedingly probable, therefore, that it is written to be used in celebrating Nicanor's day. It is interesting to note that the first person singular is constantly used to express the collective thought of the community.

21185 A condensed statement implying the verb set ms. The figure is the antithesis of that suggested by the first member of the couplet, 2, e., a narrow place. The line is an echo of 18,19

1189 This is the literal meaning of the Heb and corresponds to the usage of the Maccabean leaders. The Idumeans, for example, were judaized and circumcised by John Hyrcanus at the point of the sword. Otherwise the text must be revised to read, cause them to fall.

1181 So Gk. Heb, they are quenched as fire of thorns. This makes no sense and is evidently due to a scribal mistake and addition.

1182 This stirring vs. of the AV ws. chanted by the Protestant army at the battle of Courters as they advanced to the fray.

*1182 I. e., grant his favor as in the priestly blessing of Nu 625.

*1182 Vs. 2 is evidently corrupt. Many reconstructions have been suggested. Possibly the verb is to be read, as in I Kgs 2014, begin the dance with branches even to the altar, even to the horns of the altar. Wreathe the festal march with branches of myrtle. From the analogy of the preceding stanzas we expect here a direct address to Jehovah, as in 21-25. This is found in 23. Whatever be the exact meaning of 27b, it is evidently a prose liturgical direction that has probably crept into the text from the margin. The first part of 27, thou art God and he giveth us light, is probably secondary, for it is loosely connected with its context.

*48' Heb., great is Jehovah . . . in the city of our God. But Jehovah is evidently an addition later than the work of the editor of these pss, who systematically changed the name of Jehovah to Elohum (God). The present Heb. reading is also inconsistent with the context, with the method structure of the line, and with the general feeling of the ps. Probably the late scribe who added this word also added the preposition in before the city of Jehovah in order to make the line intelligible. Removing these later additions, the meaning of the ps. is clear.

*48' I. e., the temple hill which slopes to the north

*48' The usual reading is, the city of the great king. But the following line requires a verb to complete the thought and metre. Reading the last word of the preceding line thus solves the two or three distinct problems presented by the context.

§ 73 The exile is in the background and the restored city and temple in the foreground of this ps. The point of view is evidently that of a pilgrim who has made a long and ardious journey to worship at the temple. Worship for him is not a duty but a transcendent privilege His spirit is not crushed by the burdens imposed by the later Jewish law nor by the ceremonialism of the rivine Hallength to the temple. the ritual He loves the temple because it is the place where he may worship the living God for which his heart and flesh cry out. Pilgrimages from the lands of the dispersion do not appear to have been common until the latter part of the Persian and the early part of the Gk. period. This general date well satisfies the implications within the ps. Selah marks the end of the first The five-beat measure expresses the deep emotion and exultation of the poet Many scholars hold that the latter part of the ps is supplemented by extracts from an originally inde-

It is possible and on the whole more probable, that it refers to the strength derived from Jehovah, to which reference is made in 's although a different Heb word is used.

284 Many commentators regard this vs as a later gloss. Shield, however, here, as in 1, probably refers to Jehovah. A departure from the Massoretic division of the text gives a better meaning and satisfies the demands of the metre. If 2 is original, as seems probable, thins anointed would either refer to the Jewish people or to the psalmist himself.

§ 74 Like Ps. 84, this ps. probably comes from the Gk period Its outlook includes the lands of the dispersion. The text is obscure and the exact meaning a little doubtful. The unifying thought is that wherever the scattered members of the Hebrew race may be found they glory in their common citizenship in Zion. Even in the mind of Jehovah, citizenship in Zion is regarded as a great distinction.

psalmist with such late passages as Is. 547. s and Jer 312, and the references to the great afflictions in 2. indicate that the ps. is post-exilt. The psalmist, however, still holds the primitive conception of the future life as a joyless, impersonal enstence, 2. He is also unfamiliar with the teachings of the book of Job. The language of the ps., especially in 2. s 1. s strongly individualistic. It is possible that it may have been later used by the community as a public hymn, but there is little doubt that its foundation is the poet's own personal expense. Its thought and its place in the Psalter indicate that it probably was written about the middle of the Persian period.

b303 It is exceedingly probable that the following lines:

Sing to Jehovah, O ye his saints; And give thanks in commemoration of his holiness, are secondary, for they anticipate the thought of ¹² and are in the three-beat rather than in the prevailing four-beat measure. Their language and thought are also alien to the context.

It is probably a scribal addition, for it destroys the metrical and logical symmetry of the vs. Gk. translates the vs. in the past tense rather than as imperatives

as imperatives

2302 Here, as frequently in the pss., the Heb word for liver, which was thought to be the seat of the emotions (Assyr, kabittu), has evidently been mistaken for the more common and very similar Heb, word meaning glory.

$76 This ps., inserted in the story of Jonah, but with no close connection with the context, was probably placed there by some later editor of the prophetic book because certain of its figures recalled the experiences of the Hebrew prophet. It is not entirely clear whether it was originally intended to express the experiences of the Jewish race or of the psalmist. The points of contact with Ps. 30 are many and close. Probably the author of Jon 2 was familiar with the older ps.
His figures, however, are more hyperbolic and varied. In any case they are not to be interpreted literalistically. As in Ps 30, the poet probably has primarily in mind his own experiences as an exile in a foreign land. His zeal for the temple service is strong, cf 4, 1-9, and indicates that he probably lived during the Greek period.

All thy breakers and thy waves passed over me.

Then I said, 'I am driven out from before thine eyes;

How shall I ever again look towards thy holy temple?'

The waters surrounded me even to the quenching of my life, the abyss engulfed me.

The sea weeds were wrapped about my head; I went down to the roots of the mountains:

The earth with its bars was behind me forever.

Yet thou hast brought up my life from destruction, O Jehovah my God. When my soul fainted within me, I remembered Jehovah, And my prayer came to thee, into thy holy temple. They who regard vain gods forsake their own mercy, But I will sacrifice to thee with loud thanksgiving. I will pay that which I have vowed. Salvation is Jehovah's.

§ 77. Thanksgiving for Personal Deliverance, Ps. 6613-20

Ps. 66 ¹³I will enter thy house with burnt offerings, I will pay to thee my yows. ¹⁴Even those which my lips have uttered, h And my mouth spoke in my distress. ¹⁵I will offer to thee burnt offerings of fatlings, Together with the incense of rams; I will offer bullocks with goats.

Jehovah hath heard. He hath attended to the voice of my prayer.

> > ²⁰Bless Jehovah. Who hath not turned away my prayer, Nor his lovingkindness from me.

^{$ 77} This appendix to the national hymn found in the first part of the ps. was evidently intended to be used by a grateful offerer as he came up to the temple to present to Jehovah the offering which he had promised in connection with a vow. The second stanza describes in general terms the reason for his gratitude: because Jehovah has answered the prayer uttered with his vow. The psalmist's own experience is, without reasonable doubt, the occasion of this poem, although it doubtless found a place in the Psalter because it was adapted to use by others who in the same way came to present their sacrifice which they had vowed. It may even have been used by the community in connection with some great deliverance. There are no clear indications regarding its date. The strong repetitious and liturgical note suggests the Gk. or Maccabean age.

§ 78 This composite ps was probably written to be used by those who brought votive offerings to the temple. The refram which appears originally to have been introduced at the end of every three lines has been restored in 5, 7, 8, 10, 11, 18, 19, As Cobb has pointed out, 7, 10s are not intelligible without the refrain which is itself inferred. The refram may, as Duhm suggests, have been uttered by the offerer, while the rest of the ps. was chanted by the temple singers. The liturgical form, the Aramaic words, and the strong emphasis on the ceremonal type of religion point to the Gk. period. The interest and value consist in the prominent place which the ps. undoubtedly occupied in the worship of the compoun people.

The ps as a whole, because of its vigor and strong religious feeling, was well adapted to use in public service. The contrast here is between Israel's one God, unseen but revealed in the native slife, and the gods of the heathen represented by the lifeless images. The historical student feels here the beginning of the mortal struggle which commenced in the latter part of the Gk. period and culminated in the Maccabeau uprising. ^{§ 84} This highly liturgical ps. is a composite of ideas and phrases derived from earlier O T writing. Thus the opening vs. is found also in 1061, 1071, and 1181. Vss 2, 3 are an echo of Dt 1011, vs. 4 of Ps 7215 and 8610, vs. 5 of Jer. 1012; vs. 6 of Is 422; and 7-3 of Gen 116-12. Dt. II Is Gen 1, and other comparatively late ps. are the chief sources This dependence indicates that his ps. was probably not written before the Gk period. The allusion to Jehovah's deliverance of his people from their adversaries, in 2, and the exultant note that pervades the ps. point to that Maccabean era, when the people rejoiced over their victones Sopherim 1812 states that in late times it was sung on the seventh day of the feast of Unleavened Bread. That at the end is not found, however, in the Gk Vs. 4 is quoted in I Mac. 2525, indicating that it is at least earlier than the date of that book. It comes either from the latter part of the Gk. or the earlier part of the Maccabean period. Its confident, exultant note, perhaps, points to the reign of Simon, who worthily imitated the divine King in championing the needy and in freeing Jewish captives. Cf. I Mac. 13.

Hymns of Adoration and Trust.—The hymns of adoration and trust are, as a rule, earlier, less national, more personal, and more philosophical than the hymns of thanksgiving and praise. Also they are not so closely connected with special events in Israel's history. The date of the individual pas is less certain and less important. These hymns as a whole constitute the noblest group in the Psalter. Most of them sprang from the period when the Jewish race was the victim of bitter persecution and injustice. Many of them still reflect the stress and anguish amidst which they were born. They present theology not in theory but in action and beget in turn a faith which is not static but kinetic and dynamic.

Psalm of David. Its dependence upon Gen. 1 is obvious Vs. 4, however, reveals familiarity with the account of creation in Gen. 2. Probably the author knew the book of Genesis in its present composite form. The ps. also has certain words and expressions not found in the O.T. except in the writings of the Persian and following periods. The peaceful atmosphere also strongly suggests the prosperous days immediately following the reforms of Nehemlah and Esta. The ps. is a majestic evening hymn eminently appropriate for public worship. The three-beat measure is prevailingly used except in the first line of the refrain found at the beginning and end of the ps.

§ 92 Thus ps. has the common title, For the music director, A Psalm of David. Here two distinct poems have been combined: the first, 1-6, in praise of God's glory as revealed in the heavens, the second, 7-4, in praise of the law Cf. § 177. They were doubtless combined for liturgical use in order to bring these two witnesses of God's glory into suggestive combination and contrast. The first poem is clearly the older and prevailingly employs the four-beat, while the second ps. has the five-beat measure. The full appreciation of God as the Lord of the universe first finds expression in the exilic and post-exilic periods. The author clearly lived in the atmosphere which produced the majestic first chapter of Gen. The influence of certain of the noble Assyr and Bab. Lymns to Shamssh, the sun-god, may also be recognized. Vss. 5-5 have much in common with the ancient hymn:

O Shamash! out of the horizon of the heavens thou issuest forth, The bolt of the bright heavens thou openest,

The door of herven thou dost open.

O Shamash! over the world dost thou raise thy head;

O Shamash! with the glory of heaven thou coverest the world.

Equally majestic is the ascription to the setting sun:

O sun-god in the midst of heaven at thy setting.

O sun-god in the midst of heaven at thy setting,
May the enclosure of the pure heaven greet thee,
May the gate of heaven approach thee,
May the directing god, the messenger who loves thee, direct thy way.
May the glory of thy divinity be established for thee.
O Shamash! warrior hero, may thou be exalted!
O lord of E-babbara, as thou marchest, may thy course be directed!
Direct thy path, march along the path fixed for thy course(?).
O Shamash! judge of the world, director of its laws art thou.

It has also been suggested that the original poem once described in a succeeding stanza the course of the moon across the starry heavens. This certually is implied in ? The later description of the law may well have been substituted for this stanza by the priestly editors who were zealous to remove all traces of the popular moon worship.

19? Following a suggestion of Dr. A. A. Madsen in translating the Heb. idiom, lit., day to day, night to night, as the context absolutely demands, for it is the voiceless testimony not of day and night but of the starry heavens that has gone out in all the earth and in them that God has negared a tent for the sun.

vision of Jehovah in heaven above and it ends with the divine King in the midst of his people. It began with a storm and ends in majestic stillness.

The indications of date are few. Vs. 2 implies a well-developed priesthood. In 10 the priestly word for flood is employed, indicating that the ps. is probably post-exilic. Vs. 1. 2 are quoted with slight variations in Ps. 96-22 and I Chr. 162-25, so that it must be earlier than the Gk period. Its recognition of God's revelation through nature connects it closely with the poem of Job, and its date was probably the middle or latter part of the Persian period.

1292 I. e., the garments of worshippers.

^{§ 93} This is one of the most poetic and powerful pss. in the Psalter It opens with the command that the heavenly beings join in praising Jehovah's majesty and power. These divine attributes are then illustrated by the thunder-storm. Wagner, in his powerful opens, The Flying Dischman, has produced something of the same effect. Here, without the accompaniment of music the Heb. poet has reproduced in mere words the effect of the storm. The ps is written in the four-best, except the second stanza, which describes the storm in the distance and is in the three-best measure. This stanza vividly pictures the thunder-cloud as it hangs low over the Mediterranean and the reverberating peals of thunder. The second stanza portrays the storm as it sweeps over the heights of Lebanon and Hermon, breaking the proud cedars and making them skip like calves, while the forked lightning flashes, accompanied by the thunder, Jehovah's voice Eastward the storm sweeps, until in the third stanza it is described as it rushes out across the Jordan into the wilderness east of the Jordan Finally, the storm passes, and in the great calm that follows Jehovah is seen, as in Isaiah's vision, enthroned in his temple as he was at the beginning of creation on the great flood. The conclusion of this dramatic ps. is an assurance that Jehovah, the omnipotent, will strengthen and give peace to his people. The ps. began with a storm and ends in majesto stillness. § 93 This is one of the most poetic and powerful pss. in the Psalter It opens with the com-

^{§ 94} As has been already noted, § 38, Ps. 89, contains an early post-exile ps. to which a later psalmust has added the present hymn of adoration in order to adapt the whole to littingial use. Its literary affinities are with the late post-exile writings: II is, Zech, and Job, e.g., the use of the term holy ones to designate angels, § 7. Cf. Job 51, 1519, Zech. 142. Its background is the period of hopefulness and quiet following the work of Nehemah. It belongs, therefore, to the last half of the Persian or the earlier part of the Gk. period

The psalmust shares the common Semitic conception of the universe: the earth is a great plain above which rises the firmament with the sun, moon, and stars. All these are encircled by waters. In the waters above the earth is heaven, the divine chambers in which God dwells and from which he descends on the wind-driven clouds.

§ 95 The poet, in ³⁴, describes this ps. as a meditation and expresses the hope that it will be sweet to Jehovah. The description is felicitous. It is one of several pss which reveal the impression that the contemplation of nature made on the deeply religious Heb. mind The psalmist also had before his mental vision Gen 1 and 2 in their present composite form, Is. 40°, Job 38°-11, so that he probably lived in the Gk period. It is possible that it was written by a Jew who had visited or resided in Egypt, for it resembles at many points the famous hymn of Amenhotep IV, the great reforming king of Egypt. Cf. Introd., p 38, Breasted, Hist. of Eq., 371–376. It is also possible that the poet passes abruptly, as in ³. ¹³, to the third person under the influence of the older Egypter hymn. older Egyptian hymn

b104° Or, revising the text, the deep—like a garment was it covered, or, the deep covered it as with a garment. The idea is that the chaos of waters covered the entire earth.

104' The immediate and logical sequel of 'is'. Vs' after 's is impossible, for the mountains and valleys could not return to cover the earth as had the waters. After 's vs. 's completes the picture of creation. These vss were transposed because a Heb. scribe confused the somewhat similar initial words in each. Vs' 's is usually regarded as the sequel of ', but its verb does not apply to waters, but solid bodies, as in 5.

Let sinners be consumed out of the earth, And let the wicked be no more.

And let the wicked be no more.

These lines reflect an entirely different spirit from that which pervades the ps and reveals the point of view of the Maccabean age, for sumers probably refers to the foes of the Jews § 96 This poem does not fit in the mouth of Hannah, for it is a national rather than an individual ps. A later editor placed it in the Samuel history because of the allusion in to to "the barren that hath borne seven" The reference does not apply to Hannah but is rather a common Semitic figure of prosperity The reference in to is apparently to a messanic king The absence of such allusions in the literature following the deposition of Zerubbable later the rebuilding of the second temple in 516 sc and the prominence of those hopes in the years immediately preceding four the conclusion that this is comes from the down of hopefulness and keen expectance immediately the second temple. second temple in 516 s c and the prominence of those hopes in the years immediately preceding favor the conclusion that this ps comes from the days of hopefulness and keen expectancy immediately following the stirring sermons of Haggai in 520 s c. On the other hand, the references to the godly, the afflicted, and the arrogant point to a date nearer the middle of the Persian period. In any case the ps is probably post-exilic. Its style is simple and direct. Its faith is strong and its teachings resemble those of the book of Proverbs. Its influence on the Magnificat is obvious. Cf Lk 14c-33.

21 Cf, for the same figure, Ps 9210. The horn was the symbol of the power to accomplish.

22 So Gk, Luc, Lat, and many MSS. Heb, in Jehovah.

23 Lit, is enlarged. Cf. Is 574.

 $^{^{1}104^{29}}$ A scribe familiar with Ecc has added and return to the dust 20 10 130 I e, as at creation thou dost cause the earth to be covered with living things 2 10431-34. 250 This closing refrain was probably added to adapt the ps to liturgical use. A Maccabean scribe has also added:

Warning to opposers

3Do not go on speaking haughtily,f Nor let arrogance come from your mouth, For a God of knowledge is Jehovah, And by him actions are weighed. Granting the prayer to the one who prays, And blessing the righteous with years.

⁴2⁸ So Gk. The Heb. has an unnecessary repetition which is out of harmony with the regular metrical structure of the poem.

22 The standard Heb. text is probably corrupt. It might read, And end actions are not right, lit., adjusted (to the standard) The marginal reading and a slightly corrected Heb. text give the above reading. This text may have been before the translators of Gk. and Luc, which read, a God who weighth actions.

§ 98 The symmetry of this beautiful ps has been obscured by the vs. division to which it was subjected in the middle ages. It is written in the emotional five-beat measure by a poet who, like the author of Ps 23, was keenly appreciative of the privilege of worshipping in Jehovah's temple. Song service and vows are regarded by men as the gifts most pleasing to God. The figure of the earth watered by irrigation, in ½ 10, suggests that he was familiar with the agricultural methods of either Babyloma or Egypt. The universal outlook in ² also points to a post-exhle date. Vs ² contains echoes of the II Is. The background of the ps is bright and hopeful. § 100 This ps comes from the school of the wise. It is a meditation as well as a prayer of adoration. Its appreciation of Jehovah's character and attitude toward men, its childlike, final trust, and its faith in his universal kingdom and rule all connect it closely with the teachings of Jesus. Here is the atmosphere in which the Master Builder of Nazareth was reared, and here is the heart of that universal message which made him the Saviour of men. The dependence upon Jer., II is, and Ps 90°. 4, the Aram words, the didactic note, and the hopeful yet not arrogant spirit of the ps. indicate that it probably comes from the Gk period.

The famous Jewish commentator, Aben Ezra, called it the crown of the Prother. Nowhere in the OT. is the omniscience and immanence and uncessing care of God set forth more nobly. Amos, in 9²⁴, was the first of the prophets to declare that Jehovah's rule extended throughout the universe. In ¹³⁻¹⁵ there are traces of the Gk, scientific spirit. Unfortunately, the text in the latter part of the ps. is uncertain, owing to scribal errors. Possibly ¹³⁻²⁶ are later additions. The ps is individual. § 104 Commentators are generally agreed that Ps. 27 contains two independent poems. The first has the five-beat measure and is uttered either by the community or by its leader. The other, 7-44, cf. § 158, is in the three-beat measure and was written by a provide person. The invencible faith which this ps. expresses is timeless. Its thought is related on the one side to 42, 43,

CONFIDENCE IN DIVINE PROTECTION

One thing I ask from Jehovah, that will I seek:

That I may have a vision of the beauty of Jehovah, and that I may inquire in his temple.

⁵Verily he will hide me in his covert, in the day of trouble:

He will conceal me in the secret of his tent, he will set me upon a rock.

6And now he will lift up my heada above mine enemies around about me, And I will offer in his tabernacle sacrifices with loud rejoicing;

I will sing, yea, praises I will sing to Jehovah!

§ 105 This is one of the great pss. of the Psalter. It is immortalized in Luther's Ein fests Eury is unser Got! It is unsurpassed in the majesty of its diction and the breadth of its outlook. At the same time its thought is as simple as the faith which it expresses is strong. Its structure is expressed in these sections of three structures of the same time is thought is as simple as the faith which it expresses is strong. exceedingly artistic and well balanced. It consists of three stanzas of six lines, each concluding with the stirring refrain:

Jehovah of hosts is with us, The God of Jacob is our refuge.

The God of Jacob is our rejuge.

Probably through a scribal error it has been omitted after 3. The figure in the opening stanza is that of earthquake and flood. In 3 there is possibly a reminiscence of the overwhelming flood in the days of Noah. The second stanza develops the thought that in the midst of this wave of ruin and chaos Jerusalem, the dwelling place of the Most High, stands unmoved, because Jehovah, who rules over all nature, has taken up his abode within her. The third stanza presents a glorous picture of the period when war should cease and Jehovah's rule should be established throughout all the world. The breadth of outlook suggests the teachings of the II Is. Cf. especially 40-48. The description of the destruction of the instruments of war and the establishment of universal peace recall such late explic passages as Is. 94 and 111-19. The expectation that Jehovah's rule would be established throughout all the world allies it with the post-explicit predictions found in Zech. 3, 8, Mic. 41-4, and Pss. 96-100. The immediate background of this ps. is evidently a period of great world changes. Not one nation, but many nations, figure in the drama of history to which it alludes. It is also a period when a new sense of confidence and security has come to Jehovah's people. Certain scholars in the past have identified the political situation with the overthrow of Sennacherib in the days of Hezekiah, about 690 s.c. The psalmist may have had in mind this incident in Israel's early history, but not one but many hostile nations figure on the broad horizon which he contemplated. Briggs (Pss., I, 393-4) identifies it with the days of the Scythian invasion early in the reign of Josiah. But the missionary ideals and the broad outlook of the psalmist point, beyond reasonable doubt, to an exilic or post-exilic period. Two periods in Israel's history fully satisfy the implications and literary relationships of this ps. One is that which began in 545 with the conquest of southwestern Asia by Cyrus and ended with the majestic song may have been sung by one who joined with the temple builders in response to the stirring call of Haggai in 520 g.c. If so, he was in thorough sympathy with the hopes expressed in Zech 1-3 The position of the ps in the Psalter well accords with this date.

The other possible period is the earlier part of the days immediately following the conquest of Alexander the Great. Again nations were raging and kingdoms were tottering. Through this troublesome period Israel's fatth in Jehovah and its consciousness of keeping his law alone preserved it. There is, however, in this ps. a universal note which makes the question of its exact date comparatively unimportant. The faith which it expresses is timeless. Grounded on the experiences of the past it fearlessly contemplated the terrors of the present and the future. It voices the unshakable conviction of Israel's prophets that, in keeping with Jehovah's gracious purpose, the best is yet to be. It also presents that ideal of perfect peace for which the persecuted and oppressed sighed through all the ages.

§ 106 This ps opens with the superscription found both in the Heb and Gk, A Psalm of David, when he fied from his son Absalom. The psalmist or else a later editor clearly had in mind the incidents in David's life recorded in II Sam 167. 8, 171. 3, 11 From the contents of the ps., the incidents in David's life recorded in II Sam 167. %, 171-4. 11 From the contents of the ps., and especially vs. 7, it appears that the speaker is either a ruler or the head of a party or else the community itself. The reference in 6 to myniads of hostile peoples favors the conclusion that it is a collective ps. spoken in behalf of the community as a whole. Vs. 8 confirms this. On the other hand, if this and the ps which follows it in the Psalter are from the same author, they would both seem to voice the feelings and confidence of the faithful party in the post-exilic community. The indications as to the exact date of the ps. are few Holy mountain in 4 points rather definitely to the second temple. Foes still ring the psalmist about, although he looks back to a great overthrow that they have received at the hand of Jehovah. The atmosphere of danger and stress and the contrasting calm faith of the psalmist are characteristic of the pss. which come from the early part of the Persian period following the rebuilding of the temple. The structure of the ps is remarkably symmetrical. There are four stanzas of four three-beat lines. Seloh, at the end of 2.4. 9, corresponds to this logical division. The first and third stanzas each contain two synthetic couplets; the second and fourth each a synon. followed by a synth. couplet Stanza II is antithetic to I and IV is synthetic to III.

power to protect and reflect the same environment of malicious foes. The psalmist's faith is also based on actual experience. He is a man of prominence in the community or else is speaking for the party of the prous. The temple is in existence and he is a supporter of its services, §. In and § he is acquainted with the formula which appears in the high priest's blessing of Nu. 6^{24–28}. The peculiar phrase, right sacrifices, in § is evidently taken from Dt 33°. Vss 7°. § also recall Dt 33°. That the ps was written under the shadow of the second temple seems clear. Like many pss. of the first Davidic collection, it probably voices the religious trust of the faithful who suffered much at the hands of the mercenary rulers until Nehemiah came to inspire a nobler spirit and a higher ideal in the community as a whole. § 109 This ps has suffered much through scribal errors and additions. It is a noble example of faith triumphant over human injustice and fear. It is not clear whether it is an individual or national ps The individual note is exceedingly strong. The psalmist evidently here expresses his own personal feelings and experiences. At the same time? implies that the foes to whom he refers are hostile peoples and that, therefore, he is speaking in behalf of the Jewish community as a whole. Vs. 2°, where he speaks of the many who fight against him, carries the same implication. In any case the ps probably comes from the earlier part of the Persan period. Vs. 1° implies that the temple service is highly developed. Hostile foes luth on every side. Apparently no strong protecting wall as yet encircles Jerusalem. The Jews are exposed to constant attack from their enemies. It is a time of affliction and calamity, when Jehovah's people look to him as their only hope and source of protection. § 112 This is the most familiar and favorite ps in the Psalter. Its literary structure is striking, the first stanza has the three-beat measure, the second the four-beat, and the third the emotional five-beat measure. With marvellous feeling and vividness it reflects its picturesque Palestinan background. In the opening stanza the Western translators, in the current versions, have partially obscured the picture. The meadows are the grassy spots along the beds of the wadies where the sheep find the necessary food. The next line describes not quiet streams meandering through the meadows, as the current translation suggests to the Western reader, but the springs, often with pools below, to which the shepherd leads his sheep at noontide or at evening that there they may rest and be refreshed. It was here that not the sou but the vigor or life of the flock was restored. In ' the old translation, the valley of the shadow of death, is not supported by modern Heb etymology. The reference is rather to the deep, dark wady, through which the passage was especially dangerous because of the wild beasts and other foes lurking in the thickets that skirted the river bed. But in Job 10°2, 38°1 the same Heb. word is used to describe the abode of the dead, so that the current translations are true to the meaning though not to its etymology.

that skirted the river bed

But in Job 10²¹, 38¹⁷ the same Heb. word is used to describe the abode of the dead, so that the current translations are true to the meaning though not to its etymology
A recent writer (Kinght) in The Song of Our Syrum Guest, in a brilliant and charming monograph, has maintained that the figure of Jehovah as our shepherd runs through the entire ps
There are great difficulties, however, in accepting this alluring thesis. Each stanza with its different metre is a unit in itself. There are no clear traces of the shepherd figure outside the first stanza, which culminates in the leading of the flock to the grassy meadows and the refreshing waters. In the second stanza Jehovah is the guide of his people. The figure is suggested by the ortious, intersecting, often dimly traced paths that lead over the hills and through the dark wades of Falestine. The rod and staff in the last line probably represent the stout stick in the hand of the guide that was used as a defence against wild beats and other foes and a support in walking.
Only rarely is the word translated staff used in the O.T. to describe the shepherd's crook. The same elements of striking contrast found in the first stanza reappear in the second. On the one side there is the danger of losing the way and of hostile attacks; on the other the series confidence inspired by the divine guide. In the third stanza the figure is that of the divine host. The characteristic elements of Oriental hospitality all appear: a generously supplied table, the anomiing of the head of the guest with oil, the supply of wine, and the consciousness of protection from surrounding foes. It is difficult to conform this verse to the figure of a shepherd, for in Palestine the fold is most the place where provender and water are set before the flock, for those are found in the grassy meadows and at the springs where the sheep pause at noonday and at eventude.
The fold is simply the place where provender and water are set before the flock, for those are fou is the same sharp contrast between the nock steep through the night. Again in this stanze there is the same sharp contrast between the encircling enemies and the consciousness of perfect security and restfulness under the protection of the divine Host.

The figure of the shepherd is a familiar one in Israel's literature. It first appears in the ancient tribal song of Gen 49, where Jehovah, 2, is called the Shepherd of Israel It was expanded by Ezekiel in 341. 5, with good pasture will I (Jehovah) feed them, and on the high mountains of Israel will be their pasture; there they shall lie down in a good habitation. . . . I myself will be the shepherd

§ 113. Thanksgiving for Signal Deliverance, Ps. 401-12

Ps. 40 I waited patiently for Jehovah and he inclined his ear to me. ²He brought me up also out of a desolate pit and from the miry clay, And he placed my feet upon a rock, he established my steps; ³And he put a new song in my mouth, a song of praise to our God. Many are seeing and fearing and putting their trust in Jehovah.

Deliverance after long waiting

Happy is the man who maketh Jehovah his trust. And respecteth not the proud and those who turn aside to lies. Israel's happiness and grati-tude of my flocks, and I will lead them to pasture, is the oracle of the Lord Jehovah. It was a favorite figure with II Isaiah. Cf. Is. 40¹¹ and 49¹⁰. The latter passage was probably in the mind of the psalmist:

They (the returned exiles) shall not be hungry nor thirsty. Neither shall the glowing heat nor the sun smite them; For he who hath pity on them shall lead them, And to gushing fountains shall he guide them.

The superscripton indicates that the psalm was attributed by the later scribes to David, Israel's shepherd king. The reference in ⁶ to the house of Jehovah, however, points clearly to a penod when the temple had already been built and when it was the object of that deep adoration which characterized the worshippers who gathered about the second temple. The thought and feeling of the ps are in a sense timeless, but it voices most clearly the confidence of the Judean community during the middle of the Persian period after Nehemah's self-sacrificing patrotism had made possible the rebuilding of the walls and a partial restoration of its ancient strength with a resulting sense of security. During the troublesome preceding years Israel had, indeed, known want and passed through a dark, dangerous valley, but now behind its restored walls it felt secure, conscious that Jehovah had again taken up his abode in their holy temple. Even though their enemies pressed them close on every side, they rejoiced in the generous provisions of the divine enemies pressed them close on every side, they rejoiced in the generous provisions of the divine host Doubtless the psalmist voices his own personal experiences and gratitude, but the ps was equally well adapted to expressing the feelings of the members of the Judean community at this bright moment in their history.

§ 113 While the ultimate basis of this ps. was probably the experience of some individual. s 113 while the litimate basis of this ps. was probably the experience of some individual, it apparently voices the feelings of the Judean community after it had emerged from a period of calamity and danger. Cf. s. It reflects the spirit of the faithful within the Judean community after Nehemiah's work had delivered them from the great perils which threatened from within and without. The sense of enjoying Jehovah's favor, of keeping the law, of confidence in his protection and care is strong. The psalmist was evidently a spiritual disciple of Jeremiah and reveals his intimate acquaintance especially with Jer. 72:2 and 313:2. To this ps has been added a ps of petition, found in vss 13:1 and again independently in Ps. 70. To join these two pss. together, the editor who blended them has apparently added vs 12, which reads:

> For innumerable ends have encompassed me about, Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me so that I am not able to look up; They are more than the hairs of mine head, therefore my heart faileth me.

In the ps itself, however, there is no mention of sin and the prevailing note is altogether trusting and hopeful. The text, especially in vss. 6.7, has suffered severely in transmission so that it is impossible satisfactorily to render the original. The ps as a whole strikes a noble note of faith and confidence in Jehovah.

p 40° Heb adds and heard my cry.

40° Gk, Lat, and Syr read vanities, which was the post-exilic equivalent for idols. This rendering may possibly be the more original.

psalmist offers himself as a gift to Jehovah rather than the usual sacrificial offering. This line scribal gloss added by some one who had in mind either a copy of the book of Jeremiah or of Micah.

The tense in the Heb. also frequently changes so that it is not entirely clear whether the poet is portraying a past or present experience on the whole the context favors the present tense. The poet uses the language of Dt, II Sam, Is, Mic, and Jer. He evidently has in mind earlier criess, such as that recorded in Judg 5, when Jehovah was believed to have come from his sacred mountain in the Arabian wilderness southeast of Palestine to deliver his people. It is evident, however, that a later and even greater criss is on the poet's mental horizon. Such passages as ²¹⁻⁴ find their most perfect counterpart in the earlier persecutions and victories of the Maccabean era although the poem may come from an earlier and lesser criss. It was probably given the title, The Prayer of Habakkuk the Prophet, and appended to the writings of that pre-exilic prophet because he was the first to present the problem of doubt and the solution of fath, 21-4, which are central in the ps. The defiant and yet unpun-ished crime of the wicked

Ps. 10 'Why, O Jehovah, dost thou stand afar off, Hiding thyself in times of distress? ²The wicked are arrogantly persecuting the afflicted, Let them be caught by the plots they devise. For the wicked boasteth to his heart's desire, And the greedy curseth and spurneth Jehovah. 'In his pride the wicked saith, 'He doth not punish;' 'There is no God,' is ever his thought. His ways are corrupt at all times, Thine acts of judgment are far above, out of his sight, He laugheth, in scorn at all his adversaries; ⁶He thinketh to himself, 'I cannot be moved; For all time to come I will not fall into misfortune.' His mouth is full of cursingk and fraud,1 Under his tongue is sorrow and mischief. ⁸He stayeth in the lurking-places about the villages,^m In secret places he slayeth the innocent, His eyes spy out the unfortunate, to slay them."

The date and background of the ps are clearly the same as in is. 40-55 and the poem of Job

It is the period of bitter persecution that followed the rebuilding of the second temple (516 B c) and the disappointment of the popular hopes of attaining independence under Zerubabel.
Heathen neighbors attacked the helpless Judean community, while within the cruel, rapacious leaders preyed upon those who remained faithful to Jehovah, seizing their lands, forcing their children into slavery, of Neh 5, and taunting them because of their picty. The original prayer apparently ended with the petition in 20-2 for divine deliverance. To this is appended a doxology, 20-25, in which the sufferer declares that his prayer has been answered. This appendix was evidently

CRY FOR SPEEDY DELIVERANCE

A house of defence to deliver me: For thou art my rock and my fortress. And for the sake of thy name, O Jehovah, a Be gracious to me and guide me. Bring me out of the net they have hid for me: For thou, indeed, art my stronghold.

Into the hand I commit my spirit:

Thou hast ransomed me, O Jehovah, God of faithfulness.

⁶Thou hatest^r those who regard false idols.⁸

But I look in trust to Jehovah.

I will be glad and rejoice in thy kindness.

Thou who hast seen mine affliction.

Thou hast set my feet in a broad place.

15518 Suddenly the poet is enraged at the perfidy of his friend and calls down a malediction upon him. The reason of his hot anger is given in 20, 21, but a later scribe, familiar with the story of Korah in Nu. 1628, has added, for evils are in their dwellings. Under the influence of this gloss the number suddenly changes from singular to plural in the Heb.

55220, 21 Evidently these lines have been displaced, for they make no sense in their present position. Transferred to a place after 15, they supply the contrast demanded by the context.

10 5518 This line is doubtful and may be secondary. It supplies, however, the antecedent required in 10 and its present form may simply be due to soribal errors.

They encourage themselves in an evil purpose, They confer about laying snares, They say to themselves, 'Who will see? Let them search after iniquity; we are innocent; Even though the search be very thorough," Man's heart and mind is unfathomable.

the Persan period.

E64* This vs. is exceedingly doubtful. The VSS and commentators differ widely The above translation assumes that continues the speech of the plotters. It voices the criminal's attitude toward his crime.

^{§ 132} The petitioner is apparently an individual and his foes the rapacious rulers whose cruelty during the middle of the Persian period inspired many of these impassioned cries for divine intervention. A scribal editor has attributed it to David and connected it with the time when he fled from Saul in the cave. To this prayer has been added a song of thanksgiving, 5, 7-12, which appears again in 1081-5.

The psalmist is clearly speaking in behalf of the community, for he frequently passes from the sing, to the plural, e. g, 5. 7-10 Is, 1 In 12 he speaks of thy people in the same way as he refers to us in the next vs. The abrupt transitions from the first sing, and plural and then to the third person is one of the peculiarities of the Persian period. lowingkindness. § 146 The date of this ps is not clear although it evidently describes a definite situation. This may have been the destruction of Jerusalem, but the implication is that it was simply a great defeat from which the people hoped to recover. The invincible, warlike spirit points either to the pre-exilic or Maccabean age. The reference in to Shechem implies that the Samaritan schism had taken place. Judah alone is Jehovah's chosen land. On the basis of the reference in sa, a later editor has added an elaborate superscription connecting this ps. with David's victory over the Edomites recorded in II Sam. 8½. The editor had in mind a tradition akin to that in I Chr. 18½. ½, for he speaks of Joab as the conqueror. The literary points of contact between this ps and 44 are close. Its warlike, dauntless ambition in the presence of defeat finds its best historical setting in the days of Judas Maccabeus. Vss. 5-½ are quoted in 1085-3 and combined with 605-12. The oracle in s-9 may be older than the present ps. but the evidence is indecisive.

¹⁶⁰⁰ So Sym and Syr. Heb adds God. § 147 This ps is conspicuous for its passionate feeling, its intense patriotism, and its strong In 12-17 it not only reflects the thought but rises to the majestic height of the book of Joh faith. In ¹²⁻¹⁷ it not only reflects the thought but rises to the majestic height of the book of Job The reference in the opening vs to the sheep of thy pasture reveals an intimate familiarity with Ps 23. The same figure is used in Enoch to describe the scattered Jews who were persecuted unde Antiochus Epiphanes for their fidelity to the faith of their fathers. The ps bears all the distinctive marks of the Maccabean period. It is a vivid, pathetic description of the calamities which overtook the Jews and especially the temple during the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes. As Cobb says (Bk. of Pss., 200), This psalm has the value of a historical document which may be used to confirm the story of I Mac. 4, II Mac. 8, and not merely to illustrate it. The description of the defacement and destruction of the temple by the emissaires of Antiochus Epiphane in ¹⁻¹ is closely parallel to the description in I Mac. 1^{14, 15}, and especially in 4¹⁸, which states that when the Lews went to rededicate the allow profused. when the Jews went to rededicate the temple they saw the sanctuary laid desolate, the aliar profaned the gates burni, and shrubs growing in the court, as in a forest or as on one of the mountains, and the priests' chambers pulled down. The reference in § to the destruction of the synagogues in the lan also points to a comparatively late period. The same is true of the statement in § that the prophets had disappeared. The reference is closely parallel to that in I Mac 4%, which states the they laid aside the defiled stones of the altar until there should come a prophet to give an oracle concerning them. The question in 10 of how long is precisely the same as that which is dealt with concrete in Dan. 7, which comes from the midst of the same strenuous crisis. Vs. § voices the policy of Antiochus Epiphanes and 10 describes vividly the attitude of the heathen focs who encircled the Jews. The tendency revealed in 12 and 18 to look back to the past and draw from it inspiration for the present is another marked characteristic of the Maccabean period. The ps. was clearly written after 168 and before the rededication of the temple in 165 s.c.. The evidence points to date shortly before 165. The ps, therefore, probably comes from the same year as the encourging messages in Dan 7-12, and from the same circle of the Hasideans from which came the apocalypses in the book of Daniel. Like the author of Dan. 7-12, the psalmist looks not to the swords of the valiant patriots but to God for a sudden and signal deliverance.

1742 Possibly this line was inserted by a soribe, for it destroys the unity of the couple which characterize the ps as a whole and is unnecessary. when the Jews went to rededicate the temple they saw the sanctuary laid desolate, the altar profaned

This is one of the rew pss quoted in the first book of Maccaces. Yes and are the arrived as the scriptures and are used to describe the slaughter of certain Hasdeans by the perficious Alcimus. If 79 was an early ps. it doubtless would have been spoken of as a ps of David The absence of such a tradition implies that it was known to be the work of a comparatively recent writer but of a poet whose words had already gained a certain degree of authority. The quotation in I Mac. 717 is condensed and incomplete. It reads.

The flesh of thy saints . . . And their blood they poured out round about Jerusalem; And there was no man to bury them.

≈ 79º I. e, the Hasideans

b 793 Supplying the them, implied by the context, from the quotation from this passage in I Mac 717.

^{§ 148} According to its superscription this ps was included in a collection of Asaph pss. It has been assigned by different scholars to two different periods the Bab exile and the Maccabean struggle. There is practically no doubt, however, that it comes from the later crisis. In contents and point of view it is closely parallel to 74. The opening description of the desceration of the temple and of the slaughter of the faithful Jews is very similar to the account of Antiochus Epiphanes's merciless persecutions in II Mac. 8²⁴. There is no suggestion of such a slaughter when the Babylonians captured Jerusalem. Their treatment of the conquered people appears to have been characterized by their usual judicial fairness. The atrooties here described are also directed not so much against the Jews as against Jehovah and his temple. Vs. 11 implies that the prisoners were unjustly condemned to death, as in the days of Antiochus Epiphanes. The warlike, vinductive spirit that finds expression in 6.12 is characteristic of the Maccabean period. The persecuted saints in 2 are, without reasonable doubt, the Hasideans, who later rallied about Judas. Vss. 4.5 indicate that the author had in mind not the petty party persecutions under the hellenizing high priest Alcimus but the attacks and taunts of the hostile nations in the early days of the Maccabean struggle. The absence of any references to Judas or to the rededication of the temple indicate that it was written before 165. Like 74, it voices the feelings of the faithful about 167-166.

This is one of the few pss quoted in the first book of Maccabees. Vss. 2 and 2 are cited as written is the scriptures and are used to describe the slaughter of certain Hasideans by the perificious letters.

DELIVERANCE FROM CRUEL PERSECUTORS

Let thy compassion speedily come to meet us, g for we are brought very low. ⁹Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy renown, And deliver us, and forgiveh our sins, for the sake of thy name.

PETITIONS FOR DELIVERANCE FROM THE HEATHEN

Thy tender care for Israel in the past Thou broughtest a vine out of Egypt;
Thou didst drive out the nations and plantedst it.
Thou didst clear the way before it,
And it took root and filled the land.
The mountains were covered with its shadow,
And the cedars of God with its boughs;
It sent out its branches to the sea,
Yea, its shoots to the river.

Its present devastation ¹²Why hast thou broken down its walls, So that all who pass by the way do pluck it? ¹³The boar out of the wood doth ravage it, And the wild beasts of the field feed on it.

Save thy vine ¹⁴O God of hosts, restore us;
Look down from heaven and behold;
Give heed to this thy vine,

¹⁶They have burned it with fire, they have hewn it down;
May they perish at the frown of thy countenance.

Uphold thy people ¹⁷Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, Upon that man whom thou hast strengthened for thyself. ¹⁸So will we not draw back from thee; Quicken thou us and we will call on thy name. ¹⁹O Jehovah, God of hosts, restore us; Let thy face shine, that we may be saved.

Imprecatory Psalms.—The imprecatory pss. are not the highest products of Israel's faith. They are rather a survival of the ancient belief that a curse had a certain potency in itself. Under the influence of this belief the old Assyr. kings called down a curse upon any one who in future

^{§ 150} This is a typical imprecatory ps It evidently voices the woes and the problems of the faithful in the Judean community in the days preceding the appearance of Nehemiah The foes are apparently the arrogant, impious Jews who had east off all pity or sense of justice.

A CRY FOR VENGEANCE

3Draw out spear and javeliny to meet those who pursue me;

¹⁴As though it had been my friend, my own brother, so I demeaned myself;

As a man mourneth for his own mother, so was I bowed down in grief. ¹⁵But now, when I stumble, they rejoice, and gather together^k against me; Smiters, when I know it not, tear me asunder and cease not.1

ages dared to remove or mutilate the royal inscriptions of the effects of a curse Macording to I Sam 17^{43} , Goliath cursed David by his gods II Kgs 5^{17} states that, as a result of Elisha's curse on the guilty Gehazi, he went out from men snow-white from leprosy. The Heb sage, in Pr. 263, declares, the curse that is causeless shall not come; but he still held the popular belief regarding the curse pronounced for a cause.

The imprecatory pss. are uttered more in the spirit of early prophets than of Jesus. To interpret them rightly it must be remembered (1) that they were usually uttered in behalf of the nation or a persecuted class rather than of an individual; (2) that the men or nations against which nation or a persecuted class rather than of an individual; (2) that the men or nations against which they were uttered were cruel, shameless, deliberately, criminal, condemned by law and moral sense; (3) that in the minds of the psalmists the justice of Jehovah's rule of the world was the real issue at stake. The higher the poet's sense of justice and his conception of Jehovah's righteousness, the more passionate his prayer that Jehovah would not only vindicate his servants but himself. McFadyen has rightly said, from this point of new the imprecations are only the vehement expression of a passionate belief in the moral order and of a desire to see its consummation hastened. These pss. are grimly illumined by the context and by the pitaless age in which they were written, but for the same reason they are not adapted to modern Jewish or Christian worship.

§ 152 This ps is a striking illustration of the survival of the belief in the potency of a curse pronounced upon the guilty, for it is one long curse. It is not clear whether the foe described in 5-19 is a typical enemy or a despotic ruler. The portrait in 15-18 would fit the peridious high priests Menelaus and Jason or the arch persecutor of the Maccabean days Antiochus Epiphanes. If the latter is in the psalmist's mind, the other foes of which he speaks at the beginning and end of the ps. would be the minions of Antiochus and the apostate Jews In any case the ps. probably comes from the early part of the Maccabean struggle. Like the other hideous fruits of war and conflict, it illustrates the savage rather than the diviner impulses in the human heart and should have no place in our modern worship.

Protestation of mnocence

^{§ 155} The two chief notes in this ps are loyalty to Jehovah and imprecations upon Israel's foes who are represented by the Edomites, that Arab people who by the days of Nehemiah had occupied the territory of southern Judah and were pressing the Jewish community on its southern border. Briggs may be right in his contention that Babylon in the first line is secondary, for it, like the following Heb word there, is superfluous both from the point of view of metre and the demands of the context. It is again inserted in §, where it is clearly secondary as well as the untranslatable word which follows. The phrase in her midst, in ², tends to support, however, the presence of the word Babylon in ¹ Its presence there is also consistent with the retrospect of the distant past in ¹⁴. It also explains why the scribe inserted daughter of Babylon in ² The Bab. exile lies so far away from the poet's horizon that it is probable that he did not write before the middle of the Persian period. In later generations, and especially in the early stages of the Maccabean struggle, Jewish hostility to the Edomites increased rather than diminished. The imprecatory spirit of this ps also finds its closest parallels in the hymns of this later penned. The same inference may be drawn from the intense loyalty to Jerusalem expressed in the second stanza. imprecatory spirit of this ps also finds its closest parallels in the hymns of this later period. The same inference may be drawn from the intense loyalty to Jerusalem expressed in the second stanza. Cry for deliverence

Ps. 88 Jehovah, I cry for help by day, I cry at night before thee. ²Let my prayer enter into thy presence; Incline thine ear unto my wailing, For my soul is filled with trouble, And my life draweth nigh to Sheol. I am counted with those who go down to the grave, I am like a man who hath no help, ⁵Cast off and among the dead, ^h Like the slain who lie in the grave, Whom thou rememberest no more. Even those who are cut off from thy hand. In the lowest pit thou hast placed me, In dark places, in deepest gloom. Thy wrath resteth heavily upon me, And all thy breakers thou hast brought upon me. Thou hast put mine acquaintance far from me, Thou hast made me an abomination to them, I am shut up so that I cannot come forth. ⁹Mine eyes are wasted by affliction; I call upon thee daily, O Jehovah, To thee I spread forth my hands.

§ 166 The title, A Psalm of David; when Nathan the prophet came to him after he had gone in to Bathsheba, has confirmed in the minds of many readers the Davidic authorship of this ps. There to Baitsheba, has confirmed in the minds of many readers the Davidic authorship of this ps There is little, however, in II Sam. or the ps itself to support this conjecture of a later editor. If David's repentance had been as profound as that of the psalmist, Israel's history would have been very different. The ps, on the other hand, represents not the crude beginnings but the maturity of Israel's religion. The great ideas of both I and II is pervade it. Cf. e., 2. s., 7 and Is 11s, vs. 4 and Is. 5913, vs. 9 and Is 51s. 11, vs. 12 and Is 6310, 11, vss. 13-15 and Is 4327, 541-8. The language and the theology are those of the middle of the Persian period. Its deep sense of sin is characteristic of the exilic and post-exilic literature. It has much in common with Nehemiah's prayer in Neh. 1. Whether, as seems probable, 18, 19 represent a later appendix or not, the original ps antedates 445 s.c., when the walls of Jerusalem were rebuilt. A date between 500 and 445 s.c. fully satisfies the implications contained in the ps.

*516 This line is overfull and the meaning of the phrase translated, in the inward parts, is doubtful Possibly the word which follows is but a scribal interpretation of the preceding. The current translation, however, which has been followed, is supported by the Targums and is in keeping with the spiritual content of the ps. Emending the text, Briggs translates this:

§ 169 This ps bears the striking title, A Prayer of Moses, the Man of God, probably suggested by the reminders of the opening chapters of Gen in 1, 2 and by its majestic spirit Like many of the hymns of the Psalter, it grew out of deep personal experience, but vas 13-11 show that it was originally written to express the feelings of the Jewish community. Possibly, however, an older individual ps is to be found in 1-19. If so, 13-11 contain a later appendix, intended to adapt it to use in public worship. In any case a satisfactory background is found for the ps. in the latter part of the Gk period, when writers, like the author of Ecc., were meditating on the significance of life. The strong didactic purpose and the wisdom point of view revealed in the ps. confirm this dating.

1901 As has been pointed out by many commentators, the phrase our dwelling place, which is found in the standard Heb. text, obscures the thought of this opening stanza. It was probably introduced from 91 Certain Gk. MSS, influenced by 912, read stronghold, indicating that the text was uncertain. The present Heb reads

The Reflective and Didactic Psalms.—The sages speak in this group of pss, which might properly be classified with the other wisdom writings, such as Pr. B. Sir., and Job Here the didactic purpose of the psalmist is cloarly revealed. The wise teachers of old Israel realized that what men sang under the influence of deep emotion sank deepest into their consciousness. Plato voiced the same when he declared, the character of the people depends so much more upon their songs than upon anything else that we ought to make these the chief forces in education.

Exordium: Jehovah's great-

Jehovah's fidelity and Israel's infidelity

^{$ 170} In this vigorous hymn the thoughts of the prophets and sages mingle. Such passages as ³⁰ and ⁴¹ indicate that the author lived very nearly if not quite contemporaneously with the author of Is 40-55. Like the author of those immortal poems, the psalimist studies the past to learn the lossons which it taught regarding Johovah's attitude toward his people and their obligations to him. History, in the poet's mind, is but an illustration of Jehovah's character and ways of dealing with mon. The resemblance in general theme between this ps. and 78 and 105 is close. Its style is vigorous. It contains many ideas and figures taken from Am., Hos, and Ezek. Its prevailing expressions are those which characterize the writings of Jer and Ezek. It certainly is not eacher than the period of Judah's decline. The prominence of the reflective, wisdom motif suggests a later date. Vss. ²⁰⁻⁴³ may refer to the Assyr, invasion but they find their natural background in the period of the Bab, exile. The foes are probably the Edomites and Ammonities, who improved the hours of Judah's humiliations to pay off old scores. The hope that Johovah will soon rise in judgment finds its closest analogies in the prophecies of Hag and Zech, so that the ps. is probably to be dated in the first half of the Persan period. The prologue, 312, and the epilogue, 324, preserve the late tradition that Moses was the author of this ps. Probably the tradition that associated it with Moses is responsible for its place in the book of Deuternonomy.

⁵His infamous sons have dealt with him corruptly ⁶— A twisted and crooked generation! Is it Jehovah whom ye thus treat, O senseless and unwise people? Is not he thy father, who produced thee? Is it not be who made thee and established thee?

Jehovah's choice of his people in the past

⁷Remember the days of old, Consider the days of the past; Ask thy father and he will tell thee. Thine elders and they will say to thee: When the Most High gave the nations their inheritance, When he separated the sons of men. He set up the boundaries between the peoples. As the number of the sons of God.d But the portion of Jehovah is his people; The measure of his inheritance is Jacob.

His care for Israel in the wilderness

¹⁰He found him in a land that was a wilderness, f In a waste of howling desert; Protectingly he encircled and cared for him. He guarded him as the pupil of his eye. ¹¹Like an eagle^h that stirreth up its nest, That tenderly hovereth over its young, He spread out his wings, he took him, He bore him upon his pinions; ¹²Jehovah alone did lead him, And no alien God was with him.

His bountiful proviion for Israel's needs

¹³He caused him to ride on the heights,¹ And fed him with the fruitage of the field; And he caused him to suck honey from the crag. * Oil, also, from the flinty rock, 14Curd of kine and sheep's milk, With the fat of lambs and rams. With the steers of Bashan and he-goats.

d32° So Gk. Heb, according to the number of the sons of Israel. If the Gk. was the original reading, it reflects the late Jewish doctrine that each nation has an angel presiding over it. Cf. Dan 101. 30. 21, 124, B Sr. 1717. This idea was clearly in the minds of the Gk translators.

The reason why Jehovah gave the law to his people

For he established a testimony in Jacob, And appointed a law in Israel, Which he commanded our fathers, That they should make them known to their children, That the generation to come might know, q Even the children that should be born, Who should arise and tell them to their children, That they might set their hope in God, And not forget the works of God, But faithfully keep his commandments, 8And might not be as their fathers, A stubborn and rebellious generation, A generation that set not their heart aright, And whose spirit was not faithful with God.

Jehovah's mighty deeds at the exodus

¹²In the sight of their fathers he did wonders. In Egypt, in the territory of Zoan. ¹³He clave the sea and made them pass through. And he made the waters to stand up as a heap. ¹⁴By day he led them with a cloud, And all night with a light of fire. 15He clave the rocks in the wilderness,u of why the rival Samaritans are so perverse and have been rejected by Jehovah. His explanation is that they have been crooked from their earliest days, cf. ^{9, 59-51}, and that Jehovah at the beginning of Israelitish history chose not the tribe of Ephraim but the tribe of Judah, ⁶⁷⁻⁷². Evidently the ps. is later than the Samaritan schism. The close resemblance between its claborate preface and that of Pr and the strong wisdom note all point to the Gk. period as the date. The conception of Israel's history as a cycle of sms, disasters, repentance, and deliverances is that of the editor of Judg.

⁴⁷⁸⁷ Following the superior text of many Heb MSS Lit, with the skill of his hand $172 This ps deals with the same theme as 78 and 105 Its purpose is didactic although it was intended for lituraical use. The author aims to bring out Jehovah's goodness by contrasting it with Israel's rebellions and ingratitude Hence he begins with the people's lack of faith at the exodus. In general he follows the composite tradition of Ex. and Nu, indicating that he wrote late in the Persian or more probably in the Gk. period. Vs 4 indicates that the restoration was not yet complete. The ps is really a midrash set to music The general theory of Israel's history is that of the author of the book of Judges it was a repeated cycle of rebellion, affliction at the hands of heathen foes, and divine deliverance ^{*1067} Slightly revising the Heb. The Gk variant indicates that the vs. was corrupt.

^{§ 173} The unity of the ps has been questioned. Duhm finds two poems, 1-15, 20 and 16-19; Briggs, 1-15 and 16-20 Vss. 1sf are, however, but a highly poetic development of the theme of 15: Jehovah's acts of deliverance in Israel's early history The thought of the ps. 1s closely related to that of 78 and 80. It probably comes from the latter part of the Persian or else of the Gk. period when the persecutions of the court at Antioch and of the apostate high priests were making the lot of the faithful increasingly trying.

^{§ 177} This ps in praise of the law was appropriately joined with the noble poem in praise of God's glory as revealed in the heavens. Cf. § 92 Like Ps. 119, which it closely resembles in theme and vocabulary, it has in the first stanza at least a regular five-beat measure which appropriately expresses that passionate love and enthusiasm which filled the heart of the psalmist. The language is that of the late priestly school. The law and the ritual are the central forces in Israel's life. The ps was evidently written after the priestly reformation of Nehemiah and Ezra. Apparently the priestly law has been enforced long enough to develop an intense love and appreciation of it. The ps., therefore, may be dated some time during the Gk period. It was well adapted for use in the synagogue and for purposes of practical instruction. It is a signal demonstration of the fact that the Jewish law, instead of being regarded as a burden, was considered a blessing, Jehovah's best gift to his loyal worshippers. blessing, Jehovah's best gift to his loyal worshippers lines beginning with each letter of the alphabet Many of the lines also rhyme at the end original measure, which has been at points obscured through scribial additions or omissions, was a regular five-beat. Here, even more than in the other acrostic pss, the parallelism of thought is sacrificed to artificial form. Briggs, in his translation of this ps, has sought by an elaborate transposition of vss and rearrangement of material to restore a certain parallelism in each succeeding couplet. But even if these radical emendations be accepted, it must be admitted that the parallelism

Ism of thought is still incomplete

The author of this ps was an early Phansee or Hasidean who refers repeatedly to the persecutions which he had experienced at the hands of the proud and treacherous apostates who consetunity deride and oppress him. It is evident that he was a man of prominence in the community about whom rallied those who were faithful to the law. The indications all point to the earlier part of the Maccabean period as the date of this ps. Its aim was to set forth the value of the law and of the rewards which came from faithfully observing its commands. In this respect it is a valuable historical document, for it expresses the feelings and the devotion of many of the Jews during the earlier part of the Maccabean struggle who preferred death rather than give up their law. It is also a confession of faith. Its acrosice form suggests that it was written so that it might be memorized and recited by the candidates for membership in the scribal order, if not by all faithful Jews The eight lines under each letter of the alphabet were probably intended to correspond to the eight synonyms for the law which constantly recur throughout the pss Some commentators have gone so far as to restore these whenever they do not occur in each section, and it is not tators have gone so far as to restore these whenever they do not occur in each section, and it is not impossible that their absence at many points in the present text is due to sembal errors.

Duhm's statement that this ps is the 'emptiest production that ever blackened paper' is, of course, extreme — Its artificial character has resulted, as was practically inevitable, in a large amount of repetition. There is also little trace of logical progress in the thought. The chief emphasis is not upon life and deeds but upon belief and form. The moral and social teachings of the earlier prophets have largely disappeared. Devotion to God and abstract devotion to the law have taken the place of love and service to one's fellow men. Aside from certain lines which possess a beauty and charm of their own, the value of the ps as a whole is chiefly historical in that it represents the point of view and beliefs of early scribal Pharisaism.

§ 179 This ps has the simple title, Psalm of Dand Its didactic character explains why it was not included in special collections of pss It is the decalogue of a later psalmist who, in the spirit of the prophets, defines the qualifications for citizenship in Zion in the terms of life and act. He was acquainted with the Deuteronomic and Holiness codes Cf. s. g., said Lev. 2557. The question form and the figure employed are shared in common with Is 33¹⁴⁻¹⁵:

The sinners in Zion are filled with terror, Shuddering has seized the impious, ^{*151} I. e, be the guest of Jehovah.

THE PSALMIST'S DECALOGUE

²He who walketh without fault and doeth right. And speaketh the truth in his heart, ³Who uttereth no slander^b with his tongue, Doeth no wrong to his friend, Nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In his eyes the reprobate is despised. But those who fear Jehovah he honoreth. He sweareth to his neighbord and changeth not. ⁵He lendeth not his money for usury. Nor taketh a bribe against the innocent. He who doeth these things shall never be moved.

The criminal type

Who [of us, they say], can abide with devouring fire? Who can abide with everlasting burning

He who walks in righteousness, and speaks uprightness, He who rejects that which is gained through oppression, Who keeps his hand from taking a bribe. Who stops his ears from hearing of bloodshed, And who shuts his eyes so as not to countenance evil. He shall dwell in lofty heights, The fastnesses of the rock shall be his stronghold, His bread is provided, his waters are assured.

The parallels are so many and close that there is little doubt that the one is dependent upon the other and the dependence appears to be on the part of the ps. There are no points of contact, however, with the pressty codes or the later ceremonialism. The ps. was probably written before the great priestly reformation about 400 s.c., but it may well have been inspired by the earlier reform work of Nehemiah which led up to the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem. It emphasizes the same practical virtues as did Nehemiah, according to Nch. 5. The noble standard that it holds up is one of the high-water marks of 0.T revelation. The psalmist evidently had in mind the ancient decalogue, for he suggests ten suns to which men were especially prone. The ps. deals, however, with acts rather than motives and is in this respect below the exalted yet practical standard held up by Jesus.

§ 181. What Jehovah Demands of His People, Ps. 50

Introduction: Jehovah's advent to judge his people

Ps. 50 'The God of gods' speaketh,

Jehovah calleth the earth

From the rising of the sun to its setting.

2Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, he shineth forth.

3Our God cometh and is not silent.k

Fire devoureth before him,

And round about him the tempest rageth mightily.

He calleth to the heavens above,1

And to the earth that he may judge his people:

5'Gather to me my godly ones,

Yem who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.

And the heavens shall declare his righteousness,

For Jehovahⁿ himself is about to judge.

His charge to the faithful: ritual is unimportant

"Hear, O my people, and I will speak, Of thee, O Israel, would I complain: Jehovah, thy God, am I.

Not because of thy peace offerings will I reprove thee.

Nor for thy burnt offerings which are continually before me;

Nor male goats out of thy folds,

¹⁰For all the animals of the forests are mine.

There are thousands of cattle upon my mountains:

And the moving things of the fields are mine.

^{§ 181} Ps 50, like 15, is from a disciple of the prophets. His ultimate purpose is to make clear the superiority of the prophetic decalogue of Ex. 20 to the merely ceremonial demands of the law. His unusually elaborate introduction in ¹⁻⁸ indicates that he is well aware of the difficulties of his His unusually elaborate introduction in 1.4 indicates that he is well aware of the difficulties of his task, for he lived in an age which was emphasizing ever more strongly the importance of sacrifice and the ritual. Hence Jehovah himself, as in Dt 33, is represented as coming down to earth and summoning his faithful followers to impart to them the great teaching that heart service and righteous lives and deeds are far more important than the smoke of countless whole burnt-offerings. He does not, however, condemn these popular forms of worship, but puts the social virtues of honesty and truth and personal purity in the forefront. Evidently we have here the discourse of a sage set to music. His breadth, his courage, and his tact all impress us. This ps. also illustrates the broad outlook of later Judaism, which included in its temple hymn-book a poem that attributed a secondary place to its cherished sacrificial system. The ps probably comes from the middle or latter part of the Persian period.

Thou thoughtest that I was like thee:

I will reprove thee and set it forth before thine eyes.

It is a swas mereta in the bindists contexton a control of the strength of the throughout for Jehosch. The other minor variations are simply due to scribal errors and the evident purpose in 14 is to generalize and thus adapt the original ps. to liturgical use. The Gk, Lat, and Syr. Hexapla add nine irrelevant lines, which are quoted in Rom 310-18. They were compiled from Ps. 58, 107, 364, 1403, Is 597. 8

The original ps perhaps included only 1-5. They refer not to the heathen nations, as has often been urged, but to the iworst foes of the community, the atheistic, corrupt devourers of the people, who figure in many other of the pss of the Persian period as the foes of the pious, The five-beat measure, frequently used in the lamentation song, is here offectively employed. The prayer in 7 is in the four-beat measure. Its connection with the preceding is not close. The sanctuary on Mount Zion has been rebuilt but there has been no general return of the Jews. If this last stanza was not an original part of the ps. it was probably added not long before the appearance of Nehemiah d 14° Heb., Ye put to shame the counsels of the afflicted § 183 This ps. is distinctly personal It is evidently the outgrowth of profound individual experience At the same time it expresses universal human experience. rallies all the healing forces and makes it possible for the Divine Physician to effect the cure. The practical didactic purpose of the ps is evident. It is difficult, however, to determine its exact date. It unmistakably reflects that deeper insight which came to the Jews after the exile. It is a companion and, in a sense, the sequel of 51. Its spirit and theme are characteristic of the pss. of the middle and latter part of the Persian period. The consciousness of Jehovah's favor and the spirit of rejoicing, of. 7 and 8, suggest that it was written after Nehemiah had done his work of restoration. It probably comes from somewhere between 400 and 331 B.C.

Four lines (associated with the Heb. letter ayın) have been lost in the Heb. but retained in the Gk The theme of the ps is stated in the first vs It is the problem of evil, and the poet maintains in general the position of Job's friends. He asserts that if the wicked do not reap the consequences of their crimes their descendants will He also looks forward to a future judgment, 12. 20 In 25 the author asserts that he is an old man but he repudiates the position later maintained by the aged author of Ecc. It probably comes from the earlier part of the Persian period The poet may have been a contemporary of the author of Job In Job 142-5 the assertion made in 4-11 is combated, indicating that the poem of Job is slightly later.

Immunity from pitfalls Ps. 91 'Thou' who dwellest in the secret place of the Most High, Who abidest under the shadow of the Almighty.

§ 188 The first ps bears no superscription and in certain codices it is not even numbered. It was evidently given its present place by the latest editor that it might serve as an appropriate introduction to the entire Psatter. Cf the introduction to Tr 11-6 It reflects the point of view of the devoted student of the law and the prophets Vs 2 is based on Josh. 18, and 3 draws its figures from Jer. 175-2 and Ezek 4712 The author also writes in the spirit and literary mould of the late wisdom school. The background is a period of peace. The foce of the pious are not outside the community, as in the Persian period, but the wicked, the scoffers, those Jews who had no love for the law or respect for the teachings of the prophets and sages. All these inclinations point to the latter part of the Ck. period, not long after the days of the Chronicler, but before the beginning of the Maccabean struggle. The influence of the close contact with the debusing Cik civilization best explains the presence of the scoffers. B Sir 637, 1420, 2 reflect both the thought of this 1's and a similar background. The conception of the final judgment in 4 is not as late as Dan 122, but is parallel to that of Is. 264-19, which seems to anticate the persecutions of Anticohus Epiphanes that began in 168 B c. Its date, therefore, lies probably between 250 and 200 a.c.

Barring the illustration in 3, the parallelism is remarkably close, and extends beyond the synonymous parallelism of succeeding vss to the two regular sucphes, which stand in perfectly balanced antithetic relation to each other. Vs. 3 interrupts this, and may be secondary, but the antithetic figure in 4 seems to depend upon that in 3. 18 This vs. is a composite the simile in the first line is taken from Jer 178 where it is applied to the man who trusts in Jehovah. The figure of the living trees on the banks of the river of life, which bear fruit each month and whose leaf never withers, is from Ezek 4712. The last line, like sh, was probably suggested by Josh. 18 Since this vs departs widely from the regular metre of the rest of the ps. and its balanced rhythm of stanza, Briggs regards it as a later editorial addition (Pss. I, 6).

114 Not so is repeated in the Gk, but the parallelism with 1 does not support it.

heroic optimism was a great source of comfort to him even though it could not be made a cloak to cover sensational and unjustifiable methods. In the current lengthst translation, based on the life), there is a confusion in the opening was between the second and third persons. It is exceedingly probable, however, that the original was in the form of a direct address. The didactic purpose of the ps. is clearly evident. It may have been originally saferssed by some venorable sage to his disciple, when the youth's preliminary moral and religious training had been completed and he was just about to enter upon his membership in the congregation of those who worshipped at Jehovah's temple. It is based on the lifelong experience of the sage. It recalls the charge of an ancient warrior-king as he conferred knighthood upon a youthful follower. It was well calculated to inspire confidence and courage in the presence of countless perils. It remains as one of the priceless herisages from Israel's heroic past. The screne atmosphere and the prominent wisdom note indicate that this ps. probably comes from the Cik. period.

*912 Following the Lat. and Syr. Iteb, I will say.

The Heb. word might easily be mistaken for the one found in the standard text § 190 This acrostic ps. is closely related to the acrostic 111 the one deals with the character of Jehovah and the other with that of his faithful servants. Both probably come from the same author and from a contemporary of Ben Sira. He therefore lived during the latter part of the Gk. period. It has been suggested with great plausibility that Simon the Just, the powerful high priest and friend of Ben Sira, was in the mind of the psalinist when he painted the portrait of a God-fearing man.

^{§ 1911} This ps deals with the problem ever before the mind of the Jewish race in the days following the destruction of Jerusalem In the conclusions which it presents it has many analogues with the book of Job, although it does not depart absolutely from the solutions offered by Job's friends. The consciousness of God's nearness is, however, the psalmist's chief consolation.

THE CONSOLATION OF THE INNOCENT

²My feet^j were almost gone from under me, My steps had well nigh slipped, For I was filled with envy at the boasters, When I beheld the prosperity of the wicked. For they have no pains to endure. Sound and unimpaired is their strength: In the trouble of men they have no share. Neither are they stricken as other men. Hence pride is for them as a necklace, A garment of violence clothes them. Their iniquity comes forth from their fatness: Plans of the mind overflow. They scoff and speak of evil, They haughtily plotⁿ oppression. They direct their speech against heaven, While their tongue goes about in the earth; ¹¹And they say, 'How doth God know? And how can there be knowledge with the Most High?' ¹²Behold, such as these are the wicked, In continual ease they increase their wealth.

¹³Surely in vain have I kept my heart pure, And washed my palms in innocency, ¹⁴And been smitten all day long. And endured chastening each morning. 15Had I said, 'Thusq will I speak,' I had been unfaithful to the generation of thy children. ¹⁶But when I pondered that I might understand this,^r The more troublesome did it seem in mine eyes; ¹⁷Until I penetrated the sacred things of God. Jehovah's protecting care

Ps. 125 They who trust in Jehovah are as Mount Zion, which cannot be moved.

Forever 2 Jerusalem sits enthroned, with mountains round about her; So Jehovah is round about his people, from henceforth and forevermore. For the sceptre of wickedness shall not rest upon the lot of the rightcous, To the end that the righteous may not reach out their hands to iniquity.

Prayer

Do good, O Jehovah, to the good and to the upright in heart: But those who turn aside to their crooked ways—may Jchovah drive them away.º

¹⁹⁴¹⁸ Probably Briggs is right in concluding that righteousness here is personified even as we to-day personify justice 19418 Lit, after it. This is the common Heb. idiom equivalent to follow.
19429 Lit, have fellowship with thee
19429 Lit, and they condemn innocent blood.
19429 So certain Heb. MSS and Gk. Trad Heb. text repeats werb through dittography and adds our God.

and adds our coa.
§ 194 The reference in ³ to the sceptre of wickedness, which may lead the righteous to reach out their hands to impurty, is a vivid description of the policy of Antiochus Epiphanes. The antithesis also in ⁴· ⁵ between the righteous and the perverse is a clear reflection of conditions in the Jewah state at the beginning of the Maccabean struggle.

125⁵ Possibly the Gk. is right in reading, for he [Jehouth] will not suffer to rest.

125⁵ A scribe has expanded this last line by adding evil-doers; peace upon Israel.

Ps. 128 Happy is everyone who fears Jehovah, walking in his way. ²The toil of thy hands thou eatest, happy art thou and prosperous.

The fruits of his labor

³Like a vine that is fruitful is thy wife, in the inner room of thy house: Thy sons are as sprigs of olive, round about thy table. ⁴Behold, thus shall the man be blessed who fears Jehovah.

His domestic bliss

The Beauty of Brotherly Love, Ps. 133

Ps. 133 Behold how good and pleasant it is for brothers to dwell together! 2It is like the precious oil upon the head which runs down upon the beard, Even on Aaron's beard, running down upon the collar of his garment. ³Like the dew of Hermon, that descends upon the mountains of Zion; For there Jehovah hath commanded the blessing, even life forevermore.

^{§ 195} This ps is closely related in theme and spirit to 127. Both reflect the type of wisdom thought and the relative prosperity of the Cik. period. p 1282 So Gk o 1288 A scribe has transferred three words which belong to and inserted them in Restored to their logical and metrical position, they give us two well-balanced lines.

1288 A later editor has added here, as at the end of 125, Peace be to Israel

^{§ 196} The unity which the poet has in mind, if the present text be original, is not merely that of a family but of the Jewish race assembled for public worship. The sense of racial and religious unity spreads and delights one even as the incense of the descending oil or the refreshing dews from Hermon. The ps probably comes from the Gk. period

The Student's Old Testament

Logically and Chronologically Arranged and Translated

CHARLES FOSTER KENT, Ph.D.

WOOLSEY PROFESSOR OF BIBLICAL LITERATURE IN YALE UNIVERSITY

Announcement

The five essentials for Old Testament study: (1) A systematits contents.

HE Old Testament is a library containing the writings of Israel's inspired teachers, who lived at periods far removed from each other, ic classification of wrote from widely different points of view, and expressed their thoughts in the language and literary forms peculiar to the primitive Semitic East. Their modern readers, however, live in the very different western world. The result is that, while the combination of early songs, primitive traditions, ethnological tables, tribal stories, genealogical lists, prophetic exhortations, laws, judicial precedents, and historical narratives found, for example, in such a book as Exodus, seems perfectly natural to the intuitive Oriental, it is a fertile source of confusion to the logical Occidental. The obvious solution of the difficulty is to be found in systematic classification. This work was begun by the Greek translators of the Old Testament, to whom is chiefly due the approximately logical arrangement of the books in the English Bible. The confusion may be still further climinated by grouping together those writings which have the same general theme, aim, and literary form, and then by rearranging them within each group in the approximate order in which they were written.

(a) A comparasources.

Where there are different versions of the same tive presentation narrative or where two or more have been comof its original bined together—as is often the case in the first twelve books of the Old Testament-it is important that the originally distinct versions be printed side by side,

as in a harmony, that they may be studied comparatively and as independent literary units.

The third essential is a clear, vivid, dignified translation, which will represent not merely the words but also the ideas, the spirit, and the beauty of the original, and which will put the reader, unacquainted with Hebrew, in possession of the latest contributions of philology, exegesis, and theology.

The fourth is a clear literary analysis, which will make it possible readily to trace the logical thought of a story, law, sermon, or poem, and to note the relation of the different parts to each other and to the whole.

Finally concise, lucid notes are demanded, which will at once present the historical background and the critical, geographical, and archæological data required to illuminate the obscurities of the text, without distracting attention from its beauty and thought.

Aims and plan of the Student's Old Testament aims to supply in the fullest measure and in the most direct and usable form. The general plan is unique in its simplicity and economy of space. By combining a lucid, scholarly translation, a logical and chronological classification, and a critical and a literary analysis of the text with brief introductions and notes at the foot of the page, the reader is at once placed in command of the practical results of modern biblical research, many of which are otherwise found only in cumbersome technical works, intelligible only to the specialist.

The sane, careful scholarship and the reverent constructive spirit of the author are already known to a wide circle of Bible students through his History of the Hebrew People and his volumes in the Messages of the Bible. The present extensive work is the result of years of preparation, in which he has also been able to profit by the generous suggestions and criticisms of a large number of biblical scholars and practical teachers. The whole has been prepared to meet not theoretical but practical needs and has been tested at each point in university and Bible classes.

The work embodies the positive conclusions of the many hundreds of earnest critical scholars. and method. who have during the past two centuries been grappling with the intricate problems of the Old Testament. For the first time in its history the various versions of its more important stories and historical records are printed throughout in parallel columns so that they can be readily studied in approximately their original form. In the introductions and foot-notes the biblical data upon which these results are based are cogently presented so that the ordinary Bible reader can readily understand and estimate their significance. Where the positions are established the fact is indicated, and where there is still uncertainty this is also frankly stated. When at times the author's conclusions differ from those of the majority of scholars the reasons for the departure are fully outlined.

To the ordinary conservative biblical student, who rejects or views with alarm the critical positions of modern Old Testament teachers, an opportunity is offered, for the first time, of ascertaining just what those positions are and the chief reasons therefor. To many it will be a genuine relief to find that the foundations of Christian faith, instead of being destroyed, are simply being laid on a deeper and broader historical basis, and that the newer methods of interpretation are supremely helpful in gaining a true knowledge of the eternal messages of the Bible. To the rapidly increasing body of progressive Bible readers, who accept the principles and in general appreciate the practical value of critical biblical research, this clear, definite presentation of its more important fruits cannot fail to be most welcome. It furnishes to the historian the data for the easy reconstruction of biblical history, to the literary student the basis for a new understanding and appreciation of the wonderful literature of the Old Testament, and to the pastor, the Sunday-school teacher, the parent, and the individual reader positive religious facts and teachings, the want of which is being strongly felt in this age, when destructive conclusions are much in evidence. Above all the Student's Old Testament presents those foundations—laid bare through the untiring labors of generations of Christian scholars and by the faithful application of scientific method—upon which Old Testament interpretation and doctrine promise in the future to rest.

No effort or expense has been spared to make this work a complete manual for class-room study, for reading, and for reference. Each volume is complete in itself, embodying all the cognate Old Testament and apocryphal literature in its given field. A detailed table of contents, index, page-headings, and cross-references facilitate its use by primary as well as advanced readers.

Each volume is also fully equipped with thoroughly modern topographical and historical maps, which are introduced in connection with the literature of each period. Comparative chronological charts make it possible to trace readily the growth and approximate dates of the Old Testament and apocryphal writings in connection with the events and movements which determined their form and which in turn they record. Tables of weights and measures and carefully selected and detailed bibliographies, introduced in connection with each epoch, supply both elementary and advanced students with a complete equipment for intelligent reading and fruitful study.
